In his bill
An olive leaf he brings, pacifick sign! Milton.

No crowing cock does there his wings display,
Nor with his horny bill provoke the day. Dryden.

BILL. n. s. [bille, Sax. epibille, a two edged axe.]

1. A kind of hatchet with a hooked point, used in country work, as a hedging bill; so called from its resemblance in form to the beak of a bird of prey.

Standing troops are servants armed, who use the lance and sword, as others servants do the sickle or the bill, at the command of those who entertain them. Temple.

2. A kind of weapon anciently carried by the foot; a battle-axe.

Yea dull old women manage rusty bills;
Against thy seat both young and old rebel. Shakspeare.

BILL. n. s. [billet, Fr.]

1. A written paper of any kind.

He does receive
Particular addition from the bill
That writes them all alike. Shakspeare.

2. An account of money.

Ordinary expence ought to be limited by a man's estate, and ordered to the best, that the bills may be less than the estimation abroad. Bacon.

3. A law presented to the parliament, not yet made an act.

No new laws can be made, nor old laws abrogated or altered, but by parliament; where bills are prepared, and presented to the two houses. Bacon.

How now for mitigation of this bill,
Urg'd by the commons? doth his majesty
Incline to it or no? Shakspeare.

4. An act of parliament.

There will be no way left for me to tell you that I remember you, and that I love you, but that one, which needs no open warrant, or secret conveyance; which no bills can preclude, nor no kings prevent. Atterbury.

5. A physician's prescription.

Like him that took the doctor's bill,
And swallow'd it instead o' th' pill. Hudibras.

The medicine was prepared according to the bill. L'Estrange.

Let them, but under your superiours, kill,
When doctors first have sign'd the bloody bill. Dryden.

6. An advertisement.

And in despair, their empty pit to fill,
Set up some foreign monster in a bill. Dryden.

7. In law.

1. An obligation, but without condition, or forfeiture for non-payment. 2. A declaration in writing, that expresseth either the grief and the wrong that the complainant hath suffered by the party complained of: or else some fault that the party complained of hath committed against some law. This bill is sometimes offered to justices errants in the general assizes; but most to the lord chancellor. It containeth the fact complained of, the damages thereby suffered, and petition of process against the defendant for redress. Cowel.

The fourth thing very maturely to be consulted by the jury, is, what influence their finding the bill may have upon the kingdom. Swift.

8. A bill of mortality. An account of the numbers that have died in any district.

Most who took in the weekly bills of mortality, made little other use of them, than to look at the foot, how the burials increased or decreased. Graunt.

So liv'd our sires, ere doctors learn'd to kill,
And multiply'd with theirs the weekly bill. Dryd.

9. A bill of fare. An account of the season of provisions, or of the dishes at a feast.

It may seem somewhat difficult to make out the bills of fare for some of the forementioned suppers. Arbuthnot.

10. A bill of Exchange. A note ordering the payment of a sum of money in one place, to some person assigned by the drawer or remitter, in consideration of the value paid to him in another place.

The comfortable ſentences are bills of exchange, upon the credit of which we lay our cares down, and receive proviſions. Taylor.

All that a bill of exchange can do, is to direct to whom money is due, or taken up upon credit, in a foreign country, ſhall be paid. Locke.

To BILL. v. n. [from bill, a beak.] To careſs, as doves by joining bills; to be fond.

Doves, they ſay, will bill, after their pecking, and their murmuring. Ben Jonſon.

Still amorous, and fond, and billing,
Like Philip and Mary on a ſhilling. Hudibras.

They bill, they tread; Alcyone compreſs'd
Seven days ſits brooding on her floating neſt. Dryden.

He that bears th' artillery of Jove,
The ſtrong pounc'd eagle, and the billing dove. Dryden.

To BILL. v. a. [from bill, a writing.] To publiſh by an advertiſement: a cant word.

His maſterpiece was a compoſition that he billed about under the name of a ſovereign antidote. L'Eſtrange.

Away, I ſay. Shakſpeare.

2. To quarter ſoldiers.

They remembered him of charging the kingdom, by billeting ſoldiers. Raleigh.

The counties throughout the kingdom were ſo incenſed, and their affections poiſoned, that they refuſed to ſuffer the ſoldiers to be billeted upon them. Clarendon.

BI'LLIARDS. n. ſ. without a ſingular. [billard, Fr. of which that language has no etymology; and therefore they probably derived from England both the play and the name, which is corrupted from ballyards, yards or ſticks with which a ball is driven along a table. Thus Spenſer:

Ballyards much unfit,
And ſhuttlecocks miſbeeming manly wit.
Hubberd's Tale.

A game at which a ball is forced againſt another on the table.

Let it alone; let's to billiards. Shakſpeare.

Even noſe and cheek withal,
Smooth as is the billiard ball. Ben Jonſon

Some are forced to bound or fly upwards, almoſt like ivory balls meeting on a billiard table. Boyle.

When the ball obeys the ſtroke of a billiard ſtick, it is not any action of the ball, but bare paſſion. Locke.

BI'LLOW. n. ſ. [bilge, Germ. bolg. Dan. probably of the ſame original with bilg, Sax. a bladder.] A wave ſwoln, and hollow.

BLA'CKSMITH. n. s. [from black and smith.] A smith that works in iron; so called from being very smutty.

The blacksmith may forge what he pleases. Howel.

Shut up thy doors with bars and bolts; it will be impossible for the blacksmith to make them so fast, but a cat and a whoremaster will find a way through them. Spectator.

BLA'CKTAIL. n. s. [from black and tail.] A fish; a kind of perch, by some called ruffs, or popes. See POPE. Ditt.

BLA'CKTHORN. n. s. [from black and thorn.] The same with the sloe. See PLUM, of which it is a species.

BLA'DDER. n. s. [bladdre, Saxon; blader, Dutch.]

1. That vessel in the body which contains the urine.

The bladder should be made of a membranous substance, and extremely dilatable for receiving and containing the urine till an opportunity of emptying it. Ray.

2. It is often filled with wind, to which allusions are frequently made.

That huge great body which the giant bore
Was vanquish'd quite, and of that monstrous mass

A bladder but moderately filled with air, and strongly tied, being held near the fire, grew exceeding turgid and hard; but being brought nearer to the fire, it suddenly broke, with so loud a noise as made us for a while after almost deaf. Boyle.

3. It is usual for those, that learn to swim, to support themselves with blown bladders.

I have ventur'd,
Like little wanton boys that swim on bladders,
These many summers in a sea of glory,
But far beyond my depth: my highblown pride
At length broke under me. Shakspeare.

4. A blister; a pustule.

BLA'DDER-NUT. n. s. [staphylodendron, Lat.] A plant.

BLADDER-SENA. n. s. [colutea, Lat.] A plant.

BLADE. n. s. [blæd, bled, Sax. bled, Fr.] The spire of grass before it grows to seed; the green shoots of corn which rise from the seed. This seems to me the primitive signification of the word blade; from which, I believe, the blade of a sword was first named, because of its similitude in shape; and, from the blade of a sword, that of other weapons or tools.

There is hardly found a plant that yieldeth a red juice in the blade or ear, except it be the tree that beareth sanguis draconis. Bacon.

Send in the feeding flocks betimes t' invade
The rising bulk of the luxuriant blade. Dryden.

If we were able to dive into her secret recesses, we should find that the smallest blade of grass, or most contemptible weed, has its particular use. Swift.

Hung on every spray, on every blade
Of grass, the myriad dewdrops twinkle round. Thomson.

BLADE. n. s. [blatte, Germ. blad, Dutch.]

1. The sharp or striking part of a weapon or instrument, distinct from the handle. It is usually taken for a weapon, and so called probably from the likeness of a sword blade to a blade of grass. It is commonly applied to the knife.

He fought all round about, his thirsty blade
To bathe in blood of faithless enemy. F. Queen.

She knew the virtue of her blade, nor would Pollute her fabre with ignoble blood. Dryden.

Be his this sword, whose blade of brass displays
A ruddy gleam, whose hilt a silver blade. Pope.

2. A brisk man, either fierce or gay, called so in contempt. So we say mettle for courage.

You'll find yourself mistaken, sir, if you'll take upon you to judge of these blades by their garbs, looks, and outward appearance. L'Estrange.

Then turning about to the hangman, he said, Dispatch me, I pr'ithee, this troublesome blade. Prior.

BLADE of the shoulder. } n. s. The bone
BLADEBONE. } called by anatomists the scapula, or scapular bone.

He fell most furiously on the broiled relicks of a shoulder of mutton, commonly called a bladebone. Pope.

BLA'DED. adj. [from blade.] Having blades or spires.

Her silver visage in the wat'ry glass,
Decking with liquid pearl the bladed grass. Shaks.

As where the lightning runs along the ground,
Nor bladed grass, nor bearded corn succeeds,
But scales of scurf and putrefaction breeds. Dryd.

BLAIN. n. s. [blezene, Sax. bleyne, Dutch.] A pustule; a botch; a blister.

Itches, blains,
Sow all th' Athenian bosoms, and the crop
Be general leprosy. Shakspeare.

Botches and blains must all his flesh imboss,
And all his people. Milton.

Whene'er I been a rival nam'd,
I feel my body all inflam'd,
Which breaking out in boils and blains,
With yellow filth my linen stains. Swift.

BLA'MABLE. adj. [from blame.] Culpable; faulty.

Virtue is placed between two extremes, which are on both sides equally blamable. Dryden.

BLA'MABLENESS. n. s. [from blamable.] Fault; the state of being liable to blame; culpableness; faultiness.

BLA'MABLY. adv. [from blamable.] Culpably; in a manner liable to censure.

A process may be carried on against a person, that is maliciously or blamably absent, even to a definitive sentence. Ayliffe.

To BLAME. v. a. [blamer, Fr.]

1. To censure; to charge with a fault: it generally implies a slight censure.

Our pow'r
Shall do a court'sy to our wrath, which men
May blame, but not controul. Shakspeare.

Porphyrius, you too far did tempt your fate;
'Tis true, your duty to me it became;
But, praising that, I must your conduct blame. Dryden.

Each finding, like a friend,
Something to blame, and something to commend. Pope.

2. To blame has usually the particle for before the fault.

The reader must not blame me for making use here all along of the word sentiment. Locke.

3. Sometimes, but rarely, of.

Tomoreus he blamed of inconsiderate rashness, for that he would busy himself in matters not belonging to his vocation. Knolles' History of the Turks.

BLAME. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Imputation of a fault.

In arms the praise of success is shared among many: yet the blame of misadventures is charged upon one. Hayward.

They lay the blame on the poor little ones, sometimes passionately enough, to divert it from themselves. Locke.

2. Crime; that which produces or deserves censure.

Who would not judge us to be discharged of all blame, which are confest to have no great fault, even by their very word and testimony, in whose eyes no fault of ours hath ever hitherto been accustomed to seem small. Hooker.

I unspeak mine own detraction; here abjure
The taints and blames I laid upon myself,
For strangers to my nature. Shakspeare.

3. Hurt. Not in use.

Therewith upon his crest
With rigour so outrageous he smit,
That a large share it hew'd out of the rest,
And glancing down his shield, from blame him fairly blest. Fairy Queen.

4. There is a peculiar structure of this word, in which it is not very evident whether it be a noun or a verb, but I conceive it to be the noun. To blame, in French a tort; culpable; worthy of censure.

You were to blame, I must be plain with you
To part so slightly with your wife's first gift. Shakspeare.

I do not ask whether they were mistaken; but, whether they were to blame in the manner. Stilling fleet.

Now we should hold them much to blame,
If they went back before they came. Prior.

BLA'MEFUL. adj. [from blame and full.] Criminal; guilty; meriting blame.

Is not the causer of these timeless deaths
As blameful as the executioner? Shakspeare.

Blunt-witted lord, ignoble in demeanour,
If ever lady wrong'd her lord so much,
Thy mother took into her blameful bed
Some stern untutor'd churl. Shakspeare.

BLA'MELESLY. adv. [from blameless.] Innocently; without crime.

It is the wilful opposing explicit articles, and not the not believing them when not revealed, or not with that conviction, against which he cannot blamelessly, without pertinacy, hold out, that will bring danger of ruin on any. Hammond.

BLA'MELESNESS. n. s. [from blameless.] Innocence; exemption from censure.

Having resolved with him in Homer, that all is chargeable on Jupiter and fate, they infer, with him, the blamelessness of the inferiour agent. Hammond.

BLA'MELESS. adj. [from blame.]

1. Guiltless; innocent; exempt from censure or blame.

She found out the righteous, and preserved him blameless unto God. Wisdom

BO'LTSPRIT. } n. ſ. A maſt running out
BO'WSPRIT. } at the head of a ſhip not ſtanding upright, but aſlope. The but end of it is generally ſet againſt the foot of the foremaſt; ſo that they are a ſtay to one another. The length without board is ſufficient to let its ſails hang clear of all incumbrances. If the boltſprit fail in bad weather, the foremaſt cannot hold long after. Bowſprit is perhaps the right ſpelling. Sea Dictionary.

Sometimes I'd divide,
And burn in many places; on the topmaſt,
The yards and boltſprit would I flame diſtinctly.
Shakſpeare.

BO'LUS. n. ſ. [βόλος.] A form of medicine, in which the ingredients are made up into a ſoft maſs, larger than pills, to be ſwallowed at once.

Keep them bodies ſoluble the while by clyſters, lenitive boluſes of caſſia and manna, with ſyrup of violets Wiſeman.

By poets we are well aſſur'd,
That love, alas! can ne'er be cur'd;
A complicated heap of ills,
Deſpiſing boluſes and pills. Swift.

BOMB. n. ſ. [bombus, Lat.]

1. A loud noiſe.

An upper chamber being thought weak, was ſupported by a pillar of iron, of the bigneſs of one's arm in the midſt; which, if you had ſtruck, would make a little flat noiſe in the room, but a great bomb in the chamber beneath. Bacon.

2. A hollow iron ball, or ſhell, filled with gunpowder, and furniſhed with a vent for a fuſee, or wooden tube filled with combuſtible matter, to be thrown out from a mortar, which had its name from the noiſe it makes. The fuſee, being ſet on fire, burns ſlowly till it reaches the gunpowder, which goes off at once, burſting the ſhell to pieces with incredible violence: whence the uſe of bombs in beſieging towns. The largeſt are about eighteen inches in diameter. By whom they were invented is not known, and the time is uncertain; ſome fixing it to 1588, and others to 1495. Chambers.

The loud cannon miſſive iron pours,
And in the ſlaught'ring bomb Gradivus roars.
Rowe.

To BOMB. v. a. [from the noun.] To fall upon with bombs; to bombard.

Our king thus trembles at Namur,
Whilſt Villeroy, who ne'er afraid is,
To Bruxelles marches on ſecure,
To bomb the monks, and ſcare the ladies. Prior.

BOMB-CHEST. n. ſ. [from bomb and cheſt.] A kind of cheſt filled uſually with bombs, and ſometimes only with gunpowder, placed under ground, to tear and blow it up in the air, with thoſe who ſtand on it. Chambers.

BO'NDAGE. n. ſ. [from bond.]

1. Captivity; impriſonment; ſtate of reſtraint.

You only have overthrown me, and in my bondage conſiſts my glory. Sidney.
Say, gentle princeſs, would you not ſuppoſe
Your bondage happy, to be made a queen?
—To be a queen in bondage, is more vile
Than is a ſlave in baſe ſervility. Shakſpeare.
Our cage
We make a choir, as doth the priſon'd bird,
And ſing our bondage freely. Shakſpeare.
The king, when he deſign'd you for my guard,
Reſolv'd he would not make my bondage hard.
Dryden.

2. Obligation; tie of duty.

If ſhe has a ſtruggle for honour, ſhe is in a bondage to love; which gives the ſtory its turn that way. Pope.
He muſt reſolve by no means to be enſlaved, and brought under the bondage of obſerving oaths, which ought to vaniſh when they ſtand in competition with eating and drinking, or taking money. South.

BO'NDMAID. n. ſ. [from bond, captive, and maid.] A woman ſlave.

Good ſiſter, wrong me not, nor wrong yourſelf,
To make a bondmaid and a ſlave of me. Shakſ.

BO'NDMAN. n. ſ. [from bond and man.] A man ſlave.

Among the Romans, in making of a bondman free, was it not wondered wherefore ſo great ado ſhould be made? the maſter to preſent his ſlave in ſome court, to take him by the hand, and not only to ſay, in the hearing of the publick magiſtrate, I will that this man become free; but, after thoſe ſolemn words uttered, to ſtrike him on the cheek, to turn him round, the hair of his head to be ſhaved off, the magiſtrate to touch him thrice with a rod; in the end, a cap and a white garment given him. Hooker.
O freedom! firſt delight of human kind;
Not that which bondmen from their maſters find.
Dryden.

BONDSE'RVANT. n. ſ. [from bond and ſervant.] A ſlave; a ſervant without the liberty of quitting his maſter.

And if thy brother, that dwelleth by thee, be waxen poor, and be ſold unto thee, thou ſhalt not compel him to ſerve as a bondſervant. Leviticus.

2. A perſon bound, or giving ſecurity, for another.

BO'NDSWOMAN. n. ſ. [from bond and woman.] A woman ſlave.

My lords, the ſenators
Are ſold for ſlaves, and their wives for bondſwomen. Ben Jonſon's Cataline.

BONE. n. ſ. [ban, Saxon.]

1. The ſolid part of the body of an animal.

The bones are made up of hard fibres, tied one to another by ſmall tranſverſe fibres, as thoſe of the muſcles. In a fœtus they are porous, ſoft, and eaſily diſcerned. As their pores fill with a ſubſtance of their own nature, ſo they increaſe, harden, and grow cloſe to one another. They are all ſpungy, and full of little cells; or are of a conſiderable firm thickneſs, with a large cavity, except the teeth; and where they are articulated, they are covered with a thin and ſtrong membrane, called the periotteum. Each bone is much bigger at its extremity than in the middle, that the articulations might be firm, and the bones not eaſily put out of joint. But, becauſe the middle of the bone ſhould be ſtrong, to ſuſtain its allotted weight, and reſiſt accidents, the fibres are there more cloſely compacted together, ſupporting one another; and the bone is made hollow, and conſequently not ſo eaſily broken, as it muſt have been had it been ſolid and ſmaller. Quincy.
Thy bones are marrowleſs, thy blood is cold.
Macbeth.
There was lately a young gentleman bit to the bone. Tatler.

2. A fragment of meat; a bone with as much fleſh as adheres to it.

Like Æſop's hounds contending for the bone,
Each pleaded right, and would be lord alone.
Dryden.

3. To be upon the bones. To attack.

Puis had a month's mind to be upon the bones of him, but was not willing to pick a quarrel.
L'Eſtrange.

4. To make no bones. To make no ſcruple: a metaphor taken from a dog, who readily ſwallows meat that has no bones.

5. Bones. A ſort of bobbins, made of trotter bones, for weaving bonelace.

6. Bones. Dice.

But then my ſtudy was to cog the dice,
And dext'rouſly to throw the lucky face,
To ſhun ames ace, that ſwept my ſtakes away;
And watch the box, for fear they ſhould convey
Falſe bones, and put upon me in the play. Dryd.

To BONE. v. a. [from the noun.] To take out the bones from the fleſh; as, the cook boned the veal.

BO'NELACE. n. ſ. [from bone and lace; the bobbins with which lace is woven being frequently made of bones.] Flaxen lace, ſuch as women wear on their linen.

The things you follow, and make ſongs on now, ſhould be ſent to knit, or ſit down to bobbins or bonelace. Tatler.
We deſtroy the ſymmetry of the human figure, and ooliſhly contrive to call off the eye from great and real beauties, to childiſh gewgaw ribbands and bonelace. Spectator.

BO'NELESS. adj. [from bone.] Wanting bones.

I would, while it was ſmiling in my face,
Have pluckt my nipple from his boneleſs gums,
And daſht the brains out. Shakſpeare.

To BO'NESET. v. n. [from bone and ſet.] To reſtore a bone out of joint to its place; or join a bone broken to the other part.

BREATH. n. s. [bræðe, Saxon.]

1. The air drawn in and ejected out of the body by living animals.

Whither are they vanish'd?
Into the air: and what seem'd corporal
Melted, as breath into the wind. Shakspeare.

2. Life.

No man has more contempt than I of breath:
But whence hast thou the pow'r to give me death? Dryden.

3. The state or power of breathing freely, opposed to the condition in which a man is breathless and spent.

At other times, he calls to sue the chase
Of twice wild bealts, or run on foot a race,
T' enlarge his breast, large breath in arms to wield,
Or else, by wrestling, to wax strong and keen. Spenser.

What is your difference? speak —
—I am too fierce in breath, my lord. Shakspeare.

Spaniard, take breath; some respite I'll afford;
My cause is more advantage than your sword. Dryden.

Our swords so wholly did the fates employ,
That they, at length, grew weary to destroy.
Resting the work we brought, and, out of breath,
Made sorrow and despair attend for death. Dryden.

4. Respite; pause; relaxation.

Give me some breath, some little pause, dear lord,
Before I positively speak. Shakspeare.

5. Breeze; moving air.

Vent all thy passion, and I'll stand its shock
Calm and unruffled as a summer's sea,
When not a breath of wind flies o'er its surface. Addison's Cato.

6. A single act; an instant.

You menace me, and count me, in a breath,
Your Cupid hooks as dreadfully as death. Dryden.

BRE'ATHABLE. adj. [from breath.] That may be breathed; as, breathable air.

To BREATHE. v. n [from breath.]

His mildeſt ſaviour ſummons him away. Norris.

BRE'ATHING. n. ſ. [from breathe.]

1. Aſpiration; ſecret prayer.

While to high heav'n his pious breathings turn'd,
Weeping he hop'd, and ſacrificing mourn'd.
Prior.

2. Breathing place; vent.

The warmth diſtends the chinks, and makes
New breathings, whence new nouriſhment ſhe takes. Dryd. n.

BRE'ATHLESS. adj. [from breath.]

1. Out of breath; ſpent with labour.

Well knew
The prince, with patience and ſufferance fly,
So daily heat ſoon cooled to ſubdue;
Tho' when he breathleſs was, that battle 'gan renew.
Fairy Queen.

I remember, when the fight was done,
When I was dry with rage and extreme toil,
Breathleſs, and faint, leaning upon my ſword,
Came there a certain lord. Shakſpeare.

Many ſo ſtrained themſelves in their race, that they fell down breathleſs and dead. Haywards

Breathleſs and tir'd, is all my fury ſpent?
Or does my glutted ſpleen at length relent?
Dryden.

2. Dead.

Kneeling before this ruin of ſweet life,
And breathing to this breathleſs excellence
The incenſe of a vow, a holy vow. Shakſpeare.

Yielding to the ſentence, breathleſs thou
And pale ſhalt lie, as what thou buriedſt now.
Prior.

And, Falſtaff, you carried your guts away as nimbly, and roared for mercy, and ſtill ran and roared, as ever I heard a bull-calf. Shakſpeare.

BULL-DOG. n. ſ. [from bull and dog.] A dog of a particular form, remarkable for his courage. He is uſed in baiting the bull; and this ſpecies is ſo peculiar to Britain, that they are ſaid to degenerate when they are carried to other countries.

All the harmleſs part of him is that of a bull-dog; they are tame no longer than they are not offended. Addiſon.

BULL-FINCH. n. ſ. [rubicilla.] A ſmall bird, that has neither ſong nor whiſtle of its own, yet is very apt to learn, and taught by the mouth. Pliny.

The blackbird whiſtles from the thorny brake,
The mellow bull-finch anſwers from the grove.
Dryden.

BULL-FLY. } n. ſ. An inſect. Dict.
BULL-BEE. }

BULL-HEAD. n. ſ. [from bull and head.]

1. A ſtupid fellow; a blockhead.

2. A fiſh.

The miller's thumb, or bull-head, is a fiſh of no pleaſing ſhape; it has a head big and broad much greater than ſuitable to its body; a mouth very wide, and uſually gaping, he is armed with teeth, but his lips are very rough, much like a file; he hath two fins near to his gills, which are roundiſh or creſted; two fins under his belly, two on the back, one below the vent, and the fin of the tail is round. Nature hath painted the body of this fiſh with whitiſh, blackiſh, brownish ſpots. They are uſually full of ſpawn in the ſummer, which ſwells their vents into form of a dug. The bull-head begins to ſpawn in April, in winter we know no more what becomes of them than of eels or ſwallows. Walton.

3. A little black water vermin. Phillips.

BULL-TROUT. n. ſ. A large kind of trout.

There is, in Northumberland, a trout called a bull-trout, of a much greater length and bigneſs than any in theſe ſouthern parts. Walton.

BU'LLET. n. ſ. [boulet, Fr.] A round ball of metal, uſually ſhot out of guns.

As when the deviliſh iron engine, wrought
In deepeſt hell, and fram'd by furies skill,
With windy nitre and quick ſulphur fraught,
And ramm'd with bullet round, ordain'd to kill.
Spenſer.

Graffer, their leader, deſperately hyed
Amongſt the foremoſt of the janizaries, was at once ſhot with two bullets, and ſlain. Knolles.

And as the built, ſo different is the fight,
Their mounting ſhot is on our ſails deſign'd;
Deep in their hulls our deadly bullets light,
And through the yielding planks a paſſage find.
Dryden.

BU'LLION. n. f. [billon, Fr.] Gold or silver in the lump, unwrought, uncoined.
The balance of trade muſt of neceſſity be returned in coin or bullion. Bacon.
A ſecond multitude,
With wond'rous art, found out the maſſy ore,
Severing each kind, and ſcumm'd the bullion droſs. Milton.
Bullion is ſilver whoſe workmanſhip has no value. And thus foreign coin hath no value here for its ſtamp, and our coin is bullion in foreign dominions. Locke.
In every veſſel there is ſome ſave for immovable treaſures, when the cargo is pure bullion. Addiſon.

BULLI'TION. n. f. [from bullio, Lat.] The act or ſtate of boiling.

BU'LLOCK. n. ſ. [from bull.] A young bull.
Why, that's ſpoken like an honeſt drover; ſo they ſell bullocks. Shakſpeare.
Some drive the herds; here the horſe leads his fellows
Th' appointed way, and runs with threat'ning looks. Cowley.
Until the tranſportation of cattle into England was prohibited, the quickeſt trade of ready money here was driven by the ſale of young bullocks. Temple.

BU'LLY. n. ſ. [Skinner derives this word from burly, as a corruption in the pronunciation; which is very probably right: or from bulky, or bull-eyed; which are leſs probable. May it not come from bull, the pope's letter, implying the inſolence of thoſe who came inveſted with authority from the papal court?] A noiſy, bluſtering, quarrelling fellow: it is generally taken for a man that has only the appearance of courage.
Muſe I out of the garter'—What ſays my bully rook? Speak ſcholarly and wiſely. Shakſpeare.
All on a ſudden the doors flew open, and in came a crew of roaring bullies, with their wenches, their dogs, and their bottles. L'Eſtrange.
'Tis to ridiculous, but ſo true withal,
A bully cannot ſleep without a brawl. Dryden.
A ſwaggering hero is, at the worſt, a more tolerable character than a bully in petticoats. Addiſon.
The little man is a bully in his nature, but, when he grows conſiderable, I confine him till his wife is aſleep. Addiſon.

To BU'LLY. v. a. [from the noun.] To overbear with noiſe or menaces.
Brothers, parſon clerks, and lectors meet,
He that is drunk, or bullies all, pays the treat. Addiſon.

To BU'LLY. v. n. To be noiſy and quarrelſome.

BU'LRUSH. n. ſ. [from bull and ruſh.] A large ruſh, ſuch as grows in rivers, without knots; though Dryden has given it the epithet knotty; confounding it, probably, with the reed.
To make fine cages for the nightingale,
And baſkets of bulrujhes, was thy wont. Spenſer.
All my praiſes are but as a bulrujh caſt upon a torrent, they are born by the ſtrength of the current. Dryden.
The edges were with bending oſiers crown'd;
The bulrujh next in order ſtood,
And all within of reeds, a trembling wood. Dryd.

BU'LWARK. n. ſ. [bolwerck, Dutch; probably only from its ſtrength and largeneſs.]
1. What is now called a baſtion.
But him the ſquire made quickly to reveſt,
Encountring fierce with ſingle ſword in hand,
And 'twixt him and his lord did like a bulwark ſtand. Spenſer.
They oft repair
Their earthern bulwarks 'gainſt the ocean flood. Denham.
We have bulwarks rounds us;
Within our walls are troops enur'd to toil. Addiſ.

To BU'LWARK. v. a. [from the noun.] To fortify; to ſtrengthen with bulwarks.
And yet no bulwark'd town, or diſtant coaſt,
Preſerves the beauteous youth from being loſt. Addiſon.

BUM. n. ſ. [baene, Dutch.] The buttocks; the part on which we ſit.
The wiſeſt aunt telling the ſaddeſt tale,
Sometime for true-loue I doe ſtool mittaketh me,
Then ſlip I from her bum, down topples ſhe.
Shakſpeare.
This ſaid, he gently raiſ'd the knight,
And ſet him on his bum right. Hudibras.
From duſty ſhops neglected authors come,
Martyrs of pies, and reliques of the bum. Dryden.
The learned Sydenham does not doubt,
But profound thought will bring the gout;
And that which keeps on couch we lie,
Becauſe our reaſon 's ſoar'd too high. Waller.

BUMBA'ILIFF. n. ſ. [This is a corruption of bound bailiff, pronounced by gradual corruption boun, bum, bum bailiff.] A bailiff of the meaneſt kind; one that is employed in arreſts.
Go, maſter Andrew, ſecure me for him at the corner of the orchard, like a bumbailiff. Shakſpeare.

BU'MBARD. n. ſ. [wrong written for bombard; which ſee.] A great gun; a black jack; a leathern pitcher.
Your lame black coats, your huge one looks
Like a foul bum-bard, that would ſhed his liquor. Shakſpeare.

BU'MBAST. n. ſ. [falſely written for bombaſt; bombaſt and bombaſine being mentioned, with great probability, by Junius, as coming from boom, a tree, and ſein, ſilk; the ſilk or cotton of a tree. Mr Stevens, with much more probability, deduces them all from bombycinus.]
1. A cloth made by ſewing one ſtuff upon another; patchwork.
The uſual bumbaſt of black ſtuff ſewed on ermine, our Engliſh women are made to [illegible] very fine. Graunt.
2. Linen ſtuffed with cotton; ſtuffing; wadding.
We have receiv'd your letters full of love,
And, in our maiden council, rated them
As courtſhip, pleaſant jeſt, and courteſy,
As bumbaſt, and as lining to the time. Shakſp.

BUMP n. ſ. [perhaps from bum, as being prominent.] A ſwelling; a protuberance.
It had upon its brow a bump as big as a young cockrel's ſtone; a perilous knock, and it coſt me bitterly. Shakſpeare.
Not though his teeth were beaten out, his eyes
Hang by a ſtring, or bumps his head or face. Cleaveland.

To BUMP. v. a. [from bombus, Lat.] To make a loud noiſe, or bomb. (See BOMB.) It is applied, I think, only to the bittern.
Then to the water's brink ſhe laid her head,
And as a bittern bumps within a reed,
To thee alone, O lake, ſhe ſaid—— Dryden.

BU'MPER. n. ſ. [from bump.] A cup filled till the liquor ſwells over the brim.
Places his delight
All day in playing bumpers, and at night
Reels to the bawds. Dryden's Juvenal.

BU'MPKIN. n. ſ. [This word is of uncertain etymology; Henſhaw derives it from pumkin, a kind of worthleſs gourd, or melon. This ſeems harſh; yet we uſe the word cabbage-head in the ſame ſenſe. Bump is uſed among us for a knob, or lump: may not bumpkin be much the ſame with clodpate, loggerhead, block, and blockhead?] An awkward heavy ruſtick; a country lout.
The poor Lumpkin, that had never heard of ſuch delights before, bleſſed herſelf at the change of her condition. L'Eſtrange.
A heavy bumpkin, to get with daily care,
Can never dance three ſteps with a becoming air. Dryden.
In his white cloak the magiſtrate appears;
The country bumpkin the ſame holy wears. Dryden.
It was a favour to admit them to breeding; they might be ignorant bumpkins and clowns, if they pleaſed. Locke.

BU'MPKINLY. adj. [from bumpkin.] Having the manners or appearance of a clown; clowniſh.
He is a ſimple, blundering, and yet conceited fellow, who, aiming at deſcription, and the ſtruck wonderful, gives an air of bumpkinly romance to all he tells. Clarke.

BUNCH. n. ſ. [buncker, Daniſh, the crags of the mountains.]
1. A hard lump; a knob.

L'Estrange.

Hence we may understand, to add that upon the by, that it is not necessary.
Boyle.

So, while my lov'd revenge is full and high,
I'll give you back your kingdom by the by.
Dryden.

BY, in composition, implies something out of the direct way, and consequently some obscurity, as a by-road; something irregular, as a by-end; or something collateral, as a by-concernment; or private, as a by-law. This composition is used at pleasure, and will be understood by the examples following.

BY-COFFEEHOUSE. n. s. A coffeehouse in an obscure place.
Afterwards entered a by-coffeehouse, that stood at the upper end of a narrow lane, where I met with a nonjuror.
Addison.

BY-CONCERNMENT. n. s. An affair which is not the main business.
Our plays, besides the main design, have under-plots, or by-concernments, or less considerable persons and intrigues, which are carried on with the motion of the main plot.
Dryden.

BY-DEPENDANCE. n. s. An appendage; something accidentally depending on another.
These,
And your three motives to the battle, with
I know not how much more, should be demanded;
And all the other by-dependances,
From chance to chance.
Shakspeare.

BY-DESIGN. n. s. An incidental purpose.
And if the mus the mouse-trap lines,
They'll serve for other by-designs;
And make an artist understand
To copy out her seal or hand;
Or find void places in the paper,
To steal in something to entrap her.
Hudibras.

BY-END. n. s. Private interest; secret advantage.
All people that worship for fear, profit, or some other by-end, fall within the intendment of this table.
L'Estrange.

BY-GONE. adj. [a Scotch word.] Past.
Tell him, you're sure
All in Bohemia's well: this satisfaction
The by-gone day proclaim'd.

Heav'n knows, my son,
By what by-paths, and indirect crook'd ways,
I got this crown.
Shakspeare.

BY-RESPECT. n. s. Private end or view.
It may be that some, upon by-respects, find somewhat friendly usage in usance, at some of their hands.
Carew.

The archbishops and bishops, next under the king, have the government of the church: be not you the mean to prefer any to those places, for any by-respects, but only for their learning, gravity, and worth.
Bacon.

Augustus, who was not altogether so good as he was wise, had some by-respects in the enacting of this law; for to do any thing for nothing, was not his maxim.
Dryden.

BY-ROAD. n. s. An obscure unfrequented path.
Through slipp'ry by-roads, dark and deep,
They often climb, and often creep.
Swift.

BY-ROOM. n. s. A private room within another.
I pr'ythee, do thou stand in some by-room, while I question my puny drawer to what end he gave the sugar.
Shakspeare.

BY-SPEECH. n. s. An incidental or casual speech, not directly relating to the point.
When they come to allege what word and what law they meant, their common ordinary practice is to quote by-speeches, in some history or other, and to urge them as if they were written in most exact form of law.
Hooker.

BY-STANDER. n. s. A looker on; one unconcerned.
She broke her feathers, and, falling to the ground, was taken up by the by-standers.
L'Estrange.

The by-standers asked him, why he ran away, his bread being weight?
Locke.

BY-STREET. n. s. An obscure street.
The broker here his spacious beaver wears,
Upon his brow sits jealousies and cares;
Bent on some mortgage, to avoid reproach,
He seeks by-streets, and saves the expensive coach.
Gay.

BY-VIEW. n. s. Private self-interested purpose.
No by-views of his own shall mislead him.
Atterbury.

BY-WALK. n. s. A private walk; not the main road.
He moves afterwards in by-walks, or under-plots, as diversions to the main design, lest it should grow tedious, though they are still naturally joined.
Dryden.

The chief avenue ought to be the most ample and noble; but there should be by-walks, to retire into sometimes, for ease and refreshment.
Bacon.

BY-WAY. n. s. A private and obscure way.
Night-thefts are commonly driven in by-ways, and by blind lords, unused to any but secret
Spenser on Ireland.

Other by-ways he himself betook,
Where never foot of living wight did tread
Which thy bounteous hand
Allows thee choice of paths; take no by-way,
But gladly welcome what he doth allot,
Not grudging that thy lot hath bounds and mete.
Herbert.

A servant, or a favourite, if he be in ways and no other apparent cause of esteem, is commonly thought but a by-way to close corruption.
Bacon.

This is wonderfully diverting to the understanding, thus to receive a precept, as it were, through a by-way, and to apprehend an idea that draws a whole train after it.
Addison.

BY-WEST. adv. Westward; to the west of.
Whereupon grew that by-word, used by the Irish, that they dwelt by-west the law, which dwelt beyond the river of the Barrow.
Davies.

BY-WORD. n. s. A saying; a proverb.
Bashful Henry he depos'd; whose cowardice
Hath made us by-words to our enemies.
Shakspeare.

I knew a wise man, that had it for a by-word, when he saw men hasten to a conclusion, Stay a little, that we may make an end the sooner.
Bacon.

We are become a by-word among the nations for our ridiculous feuds and animosities.
Addison.

It will be his lot often to look singular, in loose and licentious times, and to become a by-word and a reproach among the men of wit and pleasure.
Atterbury.

BY'ASS. n. s. See BIAS.
Every inordinate lust is a false byass upon men's understandings, which naturally draws towards atheism.
Tillotson.

BYE, or BEE, come immediately from the Saxon by, bÿme, a dwelling.
Gibson.

BY'ZANTINE. See BIZANTINE. Byzantine is the true orthography.

   And privily did watch his couch, and ſit in council
   What their cabaling captains may deſign,
   That prevent, by being firſt in action. Dryd.

CA'BALIST. n. ſ. [from cabal.] One ſkilled in the traditions of the Hebrews.

   Let Moſes ſpake: with care and pain
   Some cabaliſts name, ten ſeal'd in rhime,
   Nor, ſeven-fold N ſtormain!
   Collect from cabaliſts more time. Swift.

CABALI'STICAL } adj. [from cabal.]
CABALI'STICK. } Something that has an occult meaning.

   Let Moſes and cabaliſtical, and every more in the ſame ſtrain; proper for the world to be ſo prejudiced with. Addiſon.

   He bid them to repeat two cabaliſtick words in the hearing of which the whole ſecret con ſiſted. Spectator.

CABA'LLER. n. ſ. [from cabal.] He that engages with others in cloſe deſigns; an intriguer.

   Politicians and rich, hold at the council board,
   But, cautious in the field, he ſhunn'd the ſword:

CA'BBAGE-TREE. n. ſ. A ſpecies of palm-tree.

   It is very common in the Caribbee iſlands, where it grows to a prodigious height. The leaves of this tree envelope each other, ſo that thoſe which are incloſed, being deprived of the air, are blanched; which is the part the inhabitants cut for plants for hearts, and the young ſhoots are pickled: but whenever this part is cut out, the trees are deſtroyed, nor do they riſe again from the old roots; ſo that there are very few trees left remaining near plantations. Miller.

CA'BBAGE-WORM. n. ſ. An inſect.

CA'BIN. n. ſ. [cabane, Fr. cabin, Welſh, a cottage.]

1. A ſmall room.

   Sorrow's eye, glazed with blinding tears,
   Divides one thing entire to three,
   That ſorrow's ſelf, in this confuſion,
   Then would not know it ſelf, inhabited!
   Two ſtreams, two eyes, two lights of ſeeing,
   Three with new objects join'd and multiplying,
   At once gave me the ſtare and wonder,
   That dazzled all my ſenſes. Shakſpeare.

2. A ſmall chamber in a ſhip.

   Give thanks you have lodged a thief long, and make your ſelf ready, my lord, cabin, for the miſchance of the hour, if it be a ſpan. Shakſpeare.

   Men may not expect the uſe of many cabins, and liberty of privy, in the ſeaſon. Bacon.

   The captain's head, we ſay, is in the fore-place of the ſhip, though the ſhip ſtands all the while. Locke.

3. A cottage, or ſmall houſe.

   Come from march, how'rs, many times the grey habit of anguiſh,
   Unto a lady's cabin, though weak, yet ſtronger againſt woes. Sidney.

   Nor doth it ſeem at all unfit, that ſuch as cuſtom ſhall be allowed, of digging the green ſurface of the ground, to cover their cabins, and make up their niches. Swift.

4. A tent, or temporary habitation.

   Some of green boughs their ſlender cabins frame,
   Some lodged were Tuſcoſa's ſtreets about. Fairfax.

To CA'BIN. v. n. [from the noun.] To live in a cabin.

   I'll make you feed on berries and on roots,
   And feed on curds and whey, and ſuck the goat,
   And cabin in a cave. Shakſpeare.

To CA'BIN. v. a. To confine in a cabin.

   Finance is ſcap'd; I had elſe been perfect,
   As broad and general as the caſing air:
   But now I'm cabin'd, cribb'd, confin'd, bound in,
   To ſaucy doubts and fear. Shakſpeare.

CA'BINED, adj. [from cabin.] Belonging to a cabin.

2. A ſelect number of privy counſellors ſuppoſed to be particularly truſted.

   From a cryer to the loweſt it is univerſally true; from the cabinet-council to the noſtery. Gay, et Swift.

CA'BINET-MAKER. n. ſ. [from cabinet and make.] One that makes ſmall nice drawers or boxes.

   The root of an old white thorn will make very fine knees and crooks, that trees would be of great uſe to the cabinet-maker, as well as the turners, and coopers. Mortimer.

CA'BLE n. ſ. [cabl, Welſh, cabel, Dutch.] The great rope of a ſhip to which the anchor is faſtened.

   What though the maſt be now blown over-board,
   The cable broke, the holding anchor loſt,
   And half our ſailors ſwallowed by the flood,
   Yet live we ſtill. Shakſpeare.

   The bigneſs of the cable is the life of the ſhip in all caſes of ſtreſs; and the reaſon is, becauſe it makes to move both ways, and waves, as the ſhip, moving at her anchor, is apt to ſtretch it, and not ſuddenly break it as it is forcibled. Bacon.

   Loud ſea-mark; the ſhrouds fearful cries
   Afford, and ſtorm might involves the ſkies. Dryd.

CA'BLINS. n. ſ. Small ropes uſed in ſhips. Dict.

To fan the earth, now wak'd. Milton.
2. The fall of the voice; sometimes the general modulation of the voice.
The sharing, in the close or cadence, hath an agreement with the figure in rhetorick, which they call epanorthosis; for there is a precipitance even in being delivered.
There be words not unlike with verge,
So cantos is from cano, Cyprianus!
Cowley.
3. The flow of verses, or periods.
The words, the verbs, a noun, and all the other elements of sound, as vowels, and turns of words upon the things or persons exactly the same office both in oratory and epick poetry. Dryden.
The cadence of one line must be a rule to that of the next; as the sound of the former must fall gently into that which follows. Dryden.
4. The tone or sound.
Hollow rocks retire
The sound of blust'ring winds, which all night long
Had rous'd the sea, now with hoarse cadence lull
Sea-faring men, o'erwatch'd. Milton.
He hath a confused remembrance of words since he left the university; he hath lost half their meaning, and puts them together with no regard, except to their cadence. Swift.
5. [In horsemanship.] An equal measure or proportion which a horse observes in all his motions, when he is thoroughly managed. Farrier's Dict.

He taught me how to know a man in love, in which cage of rushes, I am sure, you are not a prisoner. Shakspeare.
Those slaves, like birds that sing not in a cage,
They lost their genius, and poetick rage;
Hence Spain and Pindus may be found,
And Latian actions with their numbers crown'd.
Waller.
And parrots, imitating human tongue,
And singing birds in silver cages hung,
And every fragrant flow'r, and odorous green,
Were set with sweets in lumps of amber lost between. Dryden.
A man returns to our fancy, by remembering his horse, or his bird, or fish, by the sight of a stable, or cage, or cistern, wherein it was kept. Watts on the Mind.
The reason why so few marriages are happy is, because young ladies spend their time in making nets, not in making cages. Swift.

CA'ITIFF. n. ſ. [cattivo, Ital. a ſlave; whence it came to ſignify a bad man, with ſome implication of meanneſs; as knave in Engliſh, and fur in Latin; ſo certainly does ſlavery deſtroy virtue.

Ἥμισυ γὰρ ἀρετῆς ἀποαίνυται εὐρὺ ἄνακτας Ζεὺς, ὅτε τίς μιν ἔπος ἀπειλήσειε κακὸν ἦμαρ. Homer.

A ſlave and a ſcoundel are ſignified by the ſame words in many languages.] A mean villain; a deſpicable knave: it often implies a mixture of wickedneſs and miſery.

Vile caitiff! vaſſal of dread and deſpair,
Unworthy of the common breathed air!
Why leſt thou, dead dog, a longer day,
And doſt not up to death thyſelf prepare? Spenſ.

'Tis not impoſſible
But ſome, the wicked'ſt caitiff on the ground,
May ſcape as ſhy, as grave, as juſt, as abſolute,
As Angelo. Shakſpeare.

The wretched caitiff, all alone,
As he believ'd, began to moan,
And tell his ſorry to himſelf. Hudibras.

CAKE. n. ſ. [cuch, Teutonick.]

To CA'LCINATE. See To CALCINE.

In hardening, by taking without melting, the body hath theſe degrees; firſt, it is indurated, then made fragile, and laſtly it becomes calcinate. Bacon.

CALCINA'TION. n. ſ. [from calcine; calcination, Fr.] Such a management of bodies by fire, as renders them reducible to powder; wherefore it is called chymical pulverization. This is the next degree of the power of fire beyond that of fuſion; for when fuſion is longer continued, not only the more ſubtile particles of the body itſelf fly off, but the particles of fire likewiſe inſinuate themſelves in ſuch multitudes, and are ſo blended through its whole ſubſtance, that the fluidity, firſt cauſed by the fire, can no longer ſubſiſt. From this action ariſes a third kind of body, which being very porous and brittle, is eaſily reduced to powder; for, the fire having penetrated every where into the pores of the body, the particles are both hindered from mutual contact, and divided into minute atoms. Quincy.

Divers rendrees of bodies are thrown away, as uſeleſs, after the calcination of the body is ſuppoſed to be ended. Boyle.

This may be effected, but not without a calcination, or reducing it by art into a ſubtile powder. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

Pope.

2. Requiſition authoritative and public.

It may be feared, whether our polity would contentedly ſuffer miniſters to be always at the call, and to ſtand to the cenſure of a number of mean perſons. Hooker's Preface.

3. Divine vocation; ſummons to true religion.

Yet he at length, time to himſelf beſt known,
Rememb'ring Abraham, by ſome wond'rous call,
May bring them back repentant and ſincere.
Milton.

4. A ſummons from heaven; an impulſe.

How ſuſtly then will impious mortals fall,
Whoſe pride would ſoar to heav'n without a call.
Roſcommon.

Thoſe who to empire by dark paths aſpire,
Still plead a call to what they moſt deſire. Dryd.

St. Paul himſelf believed he did well, and that he had a call to it, when he perſecuted the chriſtians, whom he confidently thought in the wrong: but yet it was he, and not they, who were miſtaken. Locke.

5. Authority; command.

Oh, no! I wiſh he were within my call, or yours. Dryden.

6. A demand; a claim.

Dependence is a perpetual call upon humanity, and a greater incitement to tenderneſs and pity, than any other motive whatſoever. Addiſon.

7. An inſtrument to call birds.

For to note birds or beaſts were made from ſuch pipes or inſtruments, as may expreſs the ſeveral tones of thoſe creatures, which are repreſented.
Wilkins' Mathematical Magick.

8. Calling; vocation; employment.

Now through the land his cure of ſouls he ſtretch'd,
And like a primitive apoſtle preach'd
Still chearful, ever conſtant to his call;
By many follow'd, lov'd by moſt, admir'd by all.
Dryden.

9. A nomination.

Upon the ſixteenth was held the ſergeants feaſt at Ely place, there being nine ſergeants of that call. Bacon.

CA'LLAT. } n. ſ. A trull.
CA'LLET. }

He call'd her whore: a beggar, in his drink,
Could not have laid ſuch terms upon his callet.
Shakſpeare.

CA'LLING. n. ſ. [from call.]

1. Vocation; profeſſion; trade.

If God has interwoven ſuch a pleaſure with our ordinary calling, how much ſuperior muſt that be, which ariſes from the ſurvey of a pious life? Surely, as much as chriſtianity is nobler than a trade. South.

We find ourſelves obliged to go on in our calling induſtriouſly in our callings. Rogers.

I cannot forbear warning you against endeavouring at wit in your ſermons; becauſe many of your calling have made themſelves ridiculous by attempting it. Swift.

I ſcorn calling for this idle trade,
No cruel lover, to be deſpiſed. Pope.

2. Proper ſtation, or employment.

The Gauls ſtand the Roman ſenators ready to die with honour in their callings. Swift.

3. Claſs of perſons united by the ſame employment or profeſſion.

It muſt be a caution to all chriſtian churches and kingdoms, not to impoſe embaſſy on which callings, and great multitudes of men or women, who cannot be ſuppoſable to have the gift or continence. Hammond.

4. Divine vocation; invitation or impulſe to the true religion.

Give all diligence to make your calling and election ſure. 2 Peter.

St Peter was ignorant of the calling of the Gentiles. Hale's Pre.

CA'LLIPERS. n. ſ. [Of this word I know not the etymology; nor does any thing more probable occur, than that, perhaps, the word is corrupted from clippers, inſtruments with which any thing is clipped, enclоſed, or embraced.] Compaſſes with bowed ſhanks.

Callipers meaſure the diſtance of any round, cylindrick, conical body; ſo that when workmen uſe them, they open the two points to their deſigned width, and turn ſo much off the intended place, till the two points of the callipers fit juſt over their work. Moxon.

CALLO'SITY. n. ſ. [calloſité, Fr.] A kind of ſwelling without pain, like that of the ſkin by hard labour; and therefore when wounds, or the edges of ulcers, grow ſo, they are ſaid to be callous.

Quincy.

The ſurgeons ſay that the deſign of a patient, after the cure of a broken head, is too bloody, and produces too many ſcars; as the harden, and produce callous ſubſtances, inſtead of fleſh and ſkin, which are more uſeful. Atterbury and Pope.

CA'LLOUS. adj. [callus, Lat.]

1. Indurated; hardened; having the pores ſhut up.

Upon graſs of ſome, the ulcers became ſordid and callous, without diſpoſition to digeſt. Wiſeman.

2. Hardened in mind; inſenſible.

Long cuſtom has ſo long gotten poſſeſſion of the ſenſes, and callouſneſs of mind, that the contrary is grown unuſual. L'Eſtrange.

The ſacrilegious deſigned too deep,
His ſtarved heart, callous to all ſenſe,
Lurked to ſeize the ſacred ſpoil;
He ſtole, and ſo, ſecure in ſacrilege. Dryden.

CA'LLOUSNESS. n. ſ. [from callous.]

1. Hardneſs; induration of the fibres.

The callouſneſs of the gums is more of thoſe fleſhy ſubſtances, which, when they come to be thicker, and to a certain degree hard, are called callouſneſs. Cheyne.

2. Inſenſibility.

I have no hope of their repentance or converſion, and conſider them as callouſneſs, and contempt of God, and boundleſs luſts, have ſeared their conſciences. Sanderſon.

CA'LLOW. adj. Unfledged; naked; without feathers.

Burſting their callow priſon, forth diſcloſe'd
Their callow young. Milton.

Then in ſome neſt you watch the callow brood,
Whom ſtarving hunger drives to ſeek their food;
Your bounty feeds the unfledged tyrant's cry,
And ſtuffs her callow throats ſtretch'd wide for prey. Dryden.

How in ſmall flights they know to try their young,
And teach the callow child her parent's ſong. Prior.

CA'LLUS. n. ſ. [Latin.]

2. The hard ſubſtance by which broken bones are united.

CALM. adj. [calme, Fr. kalm, Dutch.]

1. Quiet; ſerene; not ſtormy; not tempeſtuous: applied to the elements.

Calm was the day, and through the trembling air
Sweet breathing Zephyrus did ſoftly play
A gentle ſpirit, that lightly did allay
Hot Titan's beams, which then did glиter fair. Spenſer.

So ſhall the ſea be calm unto us. Jonah.

2. Undiſturbed; unruffled: applied to the paſſions.

It is no ways congruous, that God ſhould be ſuppoſed to ſet nothing men naturally hate, who were made to be wrought upon by calm evidence, and gentle methods of perſuaſion. Atterbury.

The queen of ſpeech with calm attention hears,
Her eyes reſtrain the ſilver-ſtreaming tears. Pope.

CALM. n. ſ.

1. Serenity; ſtillneſs; freedom from violent motion: uſed of the elements.

It ſeemeth moſt agreeable to reaſon, that the waters rather ſtood in a quiet calm, than that they moved with any raging or overbearing violence. Raleigh.

Every pilot
Can ſteer the ſhip in calms; but he performs
The skilful part, can manage it in ſtorms. Denham.
Nor God alone in the calm ſea we find,
He mounts the ſtorm, and walks upon the wind. Pope.

2. Freedom from diſturbance; quiet; repoſe: applied to the paſſions.

Great accidents uſually portend the moſt proſperous events; and therefore ſome ſtates and worthies always ſhow unto their enemies, of the two, a countenance rather to have the fear of it, and the more forward to have a mind to the calm, as being commonly a peace of a man's own making, but a calm after a ſtorm, a piece of God. South.

To CALM. v. a [from the noun.]

1. To ſtill; to quiet.

Neptune with his trident from the bottom of the Ægean ſea, ſo calms the tempeſt raiſed by Æolus. Dryden.

2. To pacify; to appeaſe.

Thoſe perſons, which ſeem ſomewhat reſty, may be entirely and aſleep, and never ſtirred nor awakened. Atterbury.

He will'd to ſtay,
To ſacrifice rams and hecatombs to pay,
And calm Minerva's wrath. Pope.

CA'LMER. n. ſ. [from calm.] The perſon or thing that has the power of giving quiet.

Angling was, after a ſedentary ſtudy, a reſt to his mind, a cheerer of his ſpirits, a diverter of melancholy, a ſweet compoſer of unquiet thoughts, a moderator of paſſions, a procurer of contentedneſs. Walton.

CA'LMLY. adv. [from calm.]

1. Without ſtorms, or violence; ſerenely.

In nature, things move violently to their place, and calmly in their place; ſo virtue in ambition is violent, in authority ſettled and calm. Bacon.

His curled brows
Frown on the gentle ſtream, which calmly flows. Denham.

2. Without paſſions; quietly.

The nymph did like the ſcene appear,
Serenely pleaſant, calmly fair;
Soft fell her words, as ſtew the air. Prior.

CA'LMNESS. n. ſ. [from calm.]

1. Tranquillity; ſerenity; not ſtorminеſs.

While the ſteep horrid roughneſs of the wood
Strives with the gentle calmneſs of the flood. Denham.

2. Mildneſs; freedom from paſſion.

Su, 'tis fit
You have ſtrong party, or defend yourſelf
By calmneſs, or by abſence: all's in anger. Shak.
I beg the grace,
You would lay by thoſe terrours of your face;
Till calmneſs to your eyes you firſt reſtore,
I am afraid, and I can beg no more. Dryden.

CA'LMY. adj. [from calm.] Calm; peaceful. Not uſed.

And now they nigh approached to the ſted,
Where as thoſe mermaides dwelt: it was a hill
And eke a bay, on one ſide ſheltered
With the broad ſhadow of an hoary hill
Fairy Queen.

CANE. n. s. [canna, Lat.]

1. A kind of strong reed, of which walkingstaves are made; a walkingstaff.

Shall I to please another wine spring mind
Loose all mine own? God hath given me a measure
Short of his care and body's mind I find
A pain in that wherein he finds a pleasure Herbert.

The king thrust the captain from him with his cane, whereupon he took his leave, and went home Harvey.

If the joker be out of the way, or broken, for the fire with your master's cane. Swift.

2. The plant which yields the sugar.

The cane or reed grows plentifully in the East and West Indies. Other reeds have a thin hard outward dry, and their pulp void of juice, but the skin of the sugar cane is soft. It usually grows four or five feet high, and about half inch in diameter. The stem or stalk is divided by knots a foot and a half apart. At the top it puts forth long green tufted leaves, from the middle of which arise the flower and the seed. They usually plant them in pieces cut a foot and a half below the top of the former; and they are ordinarily ripe in ten months, at which time they are found quite full of a white succulent marrow, whence is expressed the liquor of which sugar is made. Chambers.

And the sweet liquor on the cane bestow,
From which prepar'd the luscious sugars flow
Rowe.

3. A lance; a dart made of cane: whence the Spanish juego de canas.

Abenamar, thy youth their sports has known,

With princes like dipleasure left in hands,
Letters, and tabouned wife. Fairy Q.
I will put the down-trod Mortimer
As high in air as this unthankful king,
As this ingrate and canker'd Bolingbroke. Shak.
Or like the wicked and canker'd venom bite
Of loathed wretches that lurking plant smite,
Or like the worst and most canker'd venom bite
Marston.

To thine own home, or to thy native sky,
Unseen of men and mistake return'd fly:
The least air is deadly to thee grown;
Deceit and canker'd malice rule thy throne
Dryden.

Let envious jealousy and canker'd spite
Produce my actions to severest light,
Arraign my every day or look or gait. Pr. of W.

2. To decay by some corrosive or destructive principle.

Silver will tarry and abide more than gold does; which, it might be corrected with a little mixture of gold, will be profitable Bacon.

To CA'NKER. v. a.

1. To corrupt; to corrode.

Resume to God his own in time and time
A tithe purloined from the whole estate.
Herbert.

2. To infect; to pollute.

An honest man will enjoy himself better in a mean estate for sure, than in an overgrown estate, that is cankered with the acquisitions of rapine and exaction. Addison.

CA'NNIBAL. n. f. An anthropophagite; a maneater.

The cannibals themselves eat no man's flesh of those that die of themselves, but of such as are slain. Bacon.

They were little better than cannibals, who do hunt one another: and he that hath most strength and swiftness, doth eat and devour all his fellows. Decay of piety.

It was my hint to speak
Of the cannibals that each other eat,
The anthropophagi. Shakspeare.

The captive cannibal, oppress with chains,
Yet braves his foes, reviles, provokes, disdains,
Of nature fierce, untamable, and proud,
He bids defiance to the howling crowd.
And spent at last, and spent in vain, as he lies,
With fiery glances mocks their rage, and dies.
Granville.

If an eleventh commandment had been given,
Thou shalt not eat human flesh; would not the cannibal have esteemed it more difficult than all the rest? Locke.

CA'NNIBALLY. adv. [from cannibal.] In the manner of a cannibal.

Before Corioli, he scotched him and notched him like a carbonado.
—Had he been cannibally given, he might have broiled and eaten him too. Shakspeare.

Several cases deserve greater punishment than many crimes that are capital among us. Swift.

3. That affects life.

In capital causes, wherein but one man's life is in question, the evidence ought to be clear: much more in a judgment upon a war, which is capital to thousands. Bacon.

4. Chief; principal.

I will, out of that infinite number, reckon but some that are most capital, and commonly occurrent both in the life and conditions of private men. Sir Edw. Hoby.

As to swerve in the least points, is error; so the capital enemies thereof God hateth, as his deadly foes, aliens, and, without repentance, children of eternal perdition. Hooker.

Forms do, in themselves, tend to confirm the truth of capital points of religion. Addison.

5. Chief; metropolitan.

This had been
Perhaps thy capital seat, from whence had spread
All generations; and had hither come,
From all the ends of th' earth, to celebrate
And reverence thee, their great progenitor.
Paradise Lost.

6. Applied to letters: large; such as are written at the beginnings or heads of books.

I'm stopp'd by all the fools I meet,
And catechis'd in ev'ry street. Swift.

CA'TECHISER. n. f. [from To catechise.] One who catechises.

CA'TECHISM. n. f. [from κατηχίζω.] A form of instruction by means of questions and answers, concerning religion.

Ways of teaching there have been surely, always usual in God's church; for the first introduction of youth to the knowledge of God, the Jews even till this day have their catechism. Hooker.

He had no catechism but the creation, needed no study but reflection, and read no book but the volume of the world. South.

CA'TECHIST. n. f. [κατηχίστης.] One whose charge is to instruct by questions, or to question the uninstructed concerning religion.

Some of years and knowledge was admitted, who had not been instructed by the catechist in the foundation, which the catechist received from the bishop Hammond's Fundamentals.

CATECHU'MEN. n. f. [κατηχούμενος.] One who is yet in the first rudiments of christianity; the lowest order of christians in the primitive church.

The prayers of the church did not begin in St Austin's time, till the catechumens were dismissed. Stillingfleet.

CATECHUMI'NICAL. adj. [from catechumen.] Belonging to the catechumens Dict.

CATEGO'RICAL. adj. [from category.] Absolute; adequate; positive; equal to the thing to be expressed.

The king's commissioners desired to know, whether the parliament's commissioners did believe that bishop's were unlawful? They could never obtain a categorical answer. Clarendon.

A single proposition, which is also categorical, may be divided again into simple and complex. Watts.

CATEGO'RICALLY. adv. [from categorical.]

1. Directly; expressly.

2. Positively; plainly.

I dare affirm, and that categorically, in all parts wherever trade is great, and continues so, that trade must be nationally profitable. Child.

CA'TEGORY. n. f. [κατηγορία.] A class; a rank; an order of ideas; a predicament.

The absolute infinitude, in a manner, quite changes the nature of being, and exalts them into a different category. Glanv.

CATENA'RIAN. adj. [from catena, Lat.] Relating to a chain; resembling a chain.

In geometry, the catenarian curve is formed by a rope or chain hanging freely between two points of suspension. Harris.

The back is bent after the manner of the catenarian curve, by which it obtains that curvature that is fittest for the included marrow. Cheyne.

To CA'TENATE. v. a. [from catena, Latin.] To chain. Dict.

CATENA'TION. n. f. [from catena, Lat.] Link; regular connexion.

This catenation, or conserving union, whenever his pleasure shall divide, let go, or separate, they shall fall from their existence Brown.

To CA'TER. v. n. [from cates.] To provide food; to buy in victuals.

He that doth the ravens feed,
Yea providently caters for the sparrow,
Be comfort to my age. Shakspeare.

CA'TER. n. f. [from the verb.] Provider; collector of provisions, or victuals: misprinted perhaps for caterer.

The oysters dredged in this Lyner, find a welcomer acceptance, where the taste is cater for the stomach, than those of the Tamar. Carew.

CA'TER. n. f. [quatre, French.] The four of cards and dice.

CA'TER-COUSIN. n. f. A corruption of quatre-cousin, from the ridiculousness of calling cousin or relation to so remote a degree.

His master and he, saving your worship's reverence, are scarce cater-cousins. Shakspeare.

Poetry and reason, how come these to be cater-cousins. Rymer.

CA'TERER. n. f. [from cater.] One employed to select and buy in provisions for the family; the provider or purveyor.

Let no scent offensive the chamber infest;
Let money, not cost, purvey and dress dishes;
Let the caterer mind the taste of each guest,
And the cook in his dressing comply with them wishes. Tusser.

He made the greedy ravens to be Elias's caterers, and bring him food King Charles.

Seldom shall one see in cities or courts that athletick vigour, which is seen in poor houses, where nature is their cook, and necessity their caterer. Swift.

CA'TERESS. n. f. [from cater.] A woman employed to cater, or provide victuals.

In pastor I do not charge innocent nature,
As if she would her children should be riotous
With her abundance; she, good cateress,
Means her provision only to the good. Milton.

CA'TERPILLAR. n. f. [This word Skinner and Minsheu are inclined to derive from chatte peluse, a weasel. It seems easily deducible from cates, food, and piller, Fr. to rob; the animal that eats up the fruits of the earth.]

1. A worm which, when it gets wings, is sustained by leaves and fruits.

The caterpillar breedeth of dew and leaves, for we see infinite caterpillars breed upon trees and hedges, by which the leaves of the trees or hedges are consumed. Bacon

Auster is drawn with a pot pouring forth water, with which descend grasshoppers, caterpillars, and creatures bred by moisture Peacham

2. Any thing voracious and useless.

2. To make any offensive or odious noise.

What a caterwauling do you keep here! If my lady has not called up her steward Malvolio, and bid him turn you out of doors, never trust me Shakspeare's Twelfth Night

Was no dispute between
The caterwauling brethren? Hudibras.

CATES. n. f. [of uncertain etymology: Skinner imagines it may be corrupted from delicate; which is not likely, because Junius observes, that the Dutch have Later in the same sense with our cater. It has no singular.] Viands; food; dish of meat: generally employed to signify nice and luxurious food.

The fair acceptance, sir, creates
The entertainment perfect, not the cates.
Ben Jonson.

O wasteful riot, never well content
With low prized fare; hunger ambitious
Of cates by land and sea far fetch't and sent Knolles.

Alas, how simple to these cates,
Was that crude apple that diverted Eve! Milton.

They, by th' alluring odour drawn, in haste
Fly to the dulcet cates, and crowding sip
Their palatable bane. Philips.

With costly cates she stain'd her frugal board,
Then with ill-gotten wealth she bought a lord.
Arbuthnot

CA'TFISH. n. f. The name of a sea fish in the West Indies; so called from its round head and large glaring eyes, by which they are discovered in hollow rocks. Phillips.

CA'THARPINGS. n. f. Small ropes in a ship, running in little blocks from one side of the shrouds to the other, near the deck: they belong only to the main shrouds; and their use is to force the shrouds tight, for the safe and safety of the masts, when the ship rolls. Harris.

CATHA'RTICAL. adj. [καθαρτικός.] Purging medicines. The vermicular or peristaltick motion of the guts continually helps on their contents, from the pylorus to the rectum; and every irritation either quickens that motion in its natural order, or occasions some little inversions in it. In both, what but slightly adheres to the coats will be loosened, and they will be more agitated, and thus rendered more fluid. By this only it is manifest, how a cathartic hastens and increases the discharges by stool; but where the force of the stimulus is great, all the appendages of the bowels, and all the viscera in the abdomen, will be twitched; by which a great deal will be drained back into the intestines, and made a part of what they discharge. Quincy.

Quicksilver precipitated either with gold, or without addition, into a powder, is wont to be strongly enough cathartical, though the chymists have not proved, that either gold or mercury hath any salt, much less any that is purgative Boyle's Scept. at Chymist.

Lustrations and catharticks of the mind were sought for, and an endeavour used to calm and regulate the fury of the passions. Decay of Piety.

The piercing caustick's ply their spiritual pow'r,
Emeticks vanish, and keen cathartick's scour.

The wise and learned, amongst the very heathens themselves, have all acknowledged [illegible] first cause, whereupon originally the being of all things dependeth; neither have they otherwise spoken of that cause, than as an agent, which, knowing what and why it worketh, observeth, in working, a most exact order or law. Hooker.

Butterflies, and other flies, revive easily when they seem dead, being brought to the sun or fire; the cause whereof is the diffusion of the vital spirit, and the dilating of it by a little heat. Bacon.

Cause is a substance exerting its power into act, to make one thing begin to be. Locke.

2. The reason; motive to any thing.

The rest that bear some other fight,
A cause will be obey'd. Shakspeare.

So great, so constant, and so general a practice, must needs have not only a cause, but also a great, a constant, and a general cause, every way commensurate to such an effect. South.

Thus, royal sir, to see you landed here,
Was cause enough of triumph for a year. Dryden.

Æneas wond'ring stood: then ask'd the cause,
Which to the stream the crowding people draws. Dryden.

Even he,
Lamenting that he had been cause of enmity,
Will often wish fate had ordain'd you friends. Rowe.

3. Reason of debate; subject of litigation.

O madness of discourse,
That cause sets up with and against thyself!
Bifold authority. Shakspeare.

Hear the cause between your brethren, and judge righteously between every man and his brother, and the stranger that is with him. Deut.

4. Side; party; ground or principle of action or opposition.

Ere to thy cause, and thee, my heart inclin'd,
Or love to party had seduc'd my mind. Tickel.

To CAUSE. v. a. [from the noun.] To effect as an agent; to produce.

Never was man whose apprehensions are sober, and by a pensive inspection advised, but hath found by an irresistible necessity one everlasting being, all for ever causing, and all for ever sustaining. Raleigh.

It is necessary in such a chain of causes to ascend to and terminate in some first, which should be the original of motion, and the cause of all other things; but itself be caused by none. South.

She weeping ask'd, in these her blooming years,
What unforeseen misfortune caus'd her care,
To loath her life, and languish in despair. Dryd.

Things that move so swift as not to affect the senses distinctly, and so cause not any train of ideas in the mind, are not perceived to move. Locke.

CA'USELESSLY. adv. [from causeless.] Without cause; without reason.

Human laws are not to be broken with scandal, nor at all without reason; for he that does it causelessly, is a despiser of the law, and undervalues its authority. Taylor's Holy Living.

CA'USELESS. adj. [from cause.]

1. Having no cause; original in itself.

Reach th' Almighty's sacred throne,
And make his causeless pow'r, the cause of all things, known. Blackmore's Creation.

2. Wanting just ground or motive.

Yet is my truth yplight,
And love avow'd to other lady late,
That, to remove the same, I have no might:
To change love causeless, is reproach to warlike knight. Spenser's Fairy Queen.

And me and mine threats not with war but death;
Thus causeless hatred endless is uneath. Fairfax.

The causeless dislike, which others have conceived, is no sufficient reason for us to forbear in any place. Hooker.

As women yet who apprehend
Some sudden cause of causeless fear,
Although that seeming cause take end,
A shaking through their limbs they find. Waller.

Alas! my fears are causeless and ungrounded,
Fantastick dreams, and melancholy fumes. Denham.

CA'USER. n. s. [from cause.] He that causes; the agent by which an effect is produced.

His whole oration stood upon a short narration, what was the cause of this metamorphosis. Sidney.

Is not the causer of these timeless deaths
As dreadful as the executioner? Shakspeare.

Abstinence, the apostle determines, is of no other real value in religion, than as a ministerial cause of moral effects. Rogers.

CA'USEY. } n. s. [chaussée, Fr. This
CA'USEWAY. } word, by a false notion of its etymology, has lately been written causeway.] A way raised and paved; a way raised above the rest of the ground.

To Succoth the lot came forth westward by the causey. 1 Chron.

The other way Satan went down,
The causey to hell-gate. Milton.

But that broad causeway will direct your ways,
And you may reach the town by noon of day. Dryden.

With shady rows
Whose feats the weary travell'r repose. Pope.

CA'USTICAL. } adj. [καυστικὸς.] Epithets
CA'USTICK. } of medicaments which destroy the texture of the parts to which they are applied, and eat it away, or burn it into an eschar, which they do by extreme minuteness, asperity, and quantity of motion, that, like those of fire itself, destroy the texture of the solids, and change what they are applied to into a substance like burnt flesh; which, in a little time, with detergent dressing, falls quite off, and leaves a vacuity in the part. Quincy.

If extirpation be safe, the best way will be by caustical medicines, or escharoticks. Wiseman.

I propose deradicating by escaroticks, and beg in with a caustick stone. Wiseman.

All too hot, cold, and moist, abounding perhaps with caustick, astringent, and coagulating particles. Arbuthnot.

CA'USTICK. n. s. A burning application.

It was a tenderness to mankind, that introduced corrosives and causticks, which are indeed but artificial fires. Temple.

The piercing causticks ply their spiteful pow'r,
Emeticks ranch, and keen cathartics scour. Garth.

CA'UTEL n. s [cautela, Lat.] Caution; scruple. Not used.

Perhaps he loves you now:
And now no soil of cautel doth besmuch
The virtue of his will. Shakspeare.

CA'UTELOUS. adj. [cauteleux, Fr.]

1. Cautious; wary; provident. Not in use.

Palladio doth wish, like a cautelous artisan, that the inward walls might bear some good share in the burden. Wotton.

2. Wily; cunning; treacherous.

Of themselves, for the most part, they are so cautelous and wily headed, especially being men of so small experience and practice in law matters, that you would wonder whence they borrow such subtilties and sly shifts. Spenser on Ireland.

Your sin
Will or exceed the common, or be caught
With cautelous baits and practice. Shakspeare.

CA'UTELOUSLY. adv. [from cautelous.]

1. Cunningly; slily; treacherously. Not in use.

All pretorian courts, if any of the parties be laid asleep, under pretence of a retirement, and the other party doth cautelously get the start or advantage; yet they will set back all things to statu quo prius. Bacon's War with Spain.

2. Cautiously; warily.

The Jews, not resolved of the Sciatica side of Jacob, do cautelously, in their diet, abstain from both. Brown.

CAUTERIZA'TION. n. s. [from cauterize.] The act of burning flesh with hot irons, or caustic medicaments.

They require, after cauterization, no further bandage, as that thereby you need to fear interception of the spirits. Wiseman.

To CA'UTERIZE. v. a. [cauteriser, Fr.] To burn with the cautery.

For each true word a blister, and each false
Be cauterizing to the root o' th' tongue,
Consuming it with speaking. Shakspeare.

No marvel though cantharides have such a corrosive and cauterizing quality; for there is not one other of the insecta, but is bred of a dirty matter. Bacon's Natural Hist.

The design of the cautery is to prevent the coming from coming, but the operators confess, that, in persons cauterized, the tears trickle down ever after. Swift.

CA'UTERY. n. s. [καυτὴρ, ηρος.]

Cautery is either actual or potential, the first burning by a hot iron, and the latter with corrosive medicines. The actual cautery is generally used to stop mortification, by burning the dead part to the quick, or to stop the effusion of blood, by searing up the vessels. Quincy.

In the heat of battle it will be necessary to have your actual cautery always ready, for that will cure the bleeding arteries in a moment. Wiseman.

CA'UTIOL. n. s. [caution, Fr. cautio, Lat.]

1. Prudence, as it respects danger; foresight; provident care; wariness against evil.

2. Security for.

Such conditions, and cautions of the condition, as might assure with as much assurance as worldly matters bear. Sir.

The Cedit, upon this new acquest, gave him part of Baccharis for caution for his disbursements. Hevlin.

The parliament would yet give his majesty sufficient caution that the war should be prosecuted. Clarendon.

He that objects any crime, ought to give caution, by the means of sureties, that he will persevere in the prosecution of such crimes. Ayliffe.

3. Provision or security against.

In despite of all the rules and cautions of government, the most dangerous and mortal of vices will come off. L'Estrange.

4. Provisionary precept.

Attention to the forementioned symptoms affords the best cautions and rules of diet, by way of prevention. Arbuthnot.

5. Warning.

To CA'UTION. v. a. [from the noun.] To warn; to give notice of a danger.

How shall our thought avoid the various snares?
Or wisdom to our caution'd soul declare
The diff'rent shapes thou pleasest to employ,
When bent to hurt, and certain to destroy. Prior.

You caution'd me against their charms,
But never gave me equal arms. Swift.

CA'UTIONARY. adj. [from caution.] Given as a pledge, or in security.

I am made the cautionary pledge,
The gage and hostage of your keeping it. Smythene.

Is there no security for the island of Britain?
Has the enemy no cautionary towns and sea ports to give us for securing trade? Swift.

CA'UTIOUS. adj. [from cautus, Lat.] Wary; watchful.

Be cautious of him; for he is sometimes an inconstant lover, because he hath a great advantage. Swift.

CA'UTIOUSLY. adv. [from cautious.] In an attentive wary manner; warily.

They know how fickle common lovers are:
Their oaths and vows are cautiously believ'd;
For few there are but have been once deceiv'd.
Dryden.

CA'UTIOUSNESS. n. f. [from cautious.] Watchfulness; vigilance; circumspection; provident care; prudence with respect to danger.

I could not but approve their generous constancy and cautiousness. King Charles.

We should always act with great cautiousness and circumspection, in points where it is not impossible that we may be deceived. Addison.

To CAW. v. n. [taken from the sound.] To cry as the rook, raven, or crow.

Ruffle-pated choughs, many in sort,
Rising and cawing at the gun's report. Shakesp.

A walk of aged elms, so very high, that the rooks and crows upon the tops seem to be cawing in another region. Addison.

The rook, who high amid the boughs,
In early spring, his airy city builds,
And cheerful caws. Thomson's Spring.

To CEASE. v. n. [cesser, Fr. cesso, Lat.]

1. To leave off; to stop; to give over; to desist: with from before a noun.

The lives of all, who cease from combat, spare;
My brother's be your most peculiar care. Dryd.

2. To fail; to be extinct; to pass away.

The poor man shall never cease out of the land. Deuteronomy.

The soul being removed, the faculties and operations of life, sense, and intellection, cease from that mere corporeal, and are no longer in it. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

3. To be at an end.

But now the wonder ceases, since I see
She kept them only, Tityrus, for thee. Dryden.

4. To rest.

The members of Christ have ceased from their labours. Spratt.

To CEASE. v. a. To put a stop to; to put an end to.

Importune him for monies; be not ceased
With slight denial. Shakspeare.

You may sooner, by imagination, quicken or slack a motion, than raise or cease it, as it is easier to make a dog go slower, than to make him stand still. Bacon's Natural History.

Can then this impious rage. Milton.
But he, her fears to cease,
Sent down the meek-eyed peace. Milton.

The discord is complete, nor can they cease
The dire debate, nor yet command the peace.
Dryden.

CEASE. n. f. [from the verb.] Extinction; failure: perhaps for decease.

The cease of majesty
Dies not alone, but, like a gulph, with draws
What's near it with it. Shakspeare.

CE'ASELESS. adj. [from cease.] Incessant; perpetual; continual; without pause; without stop; without end.

My guiltless blood must quench the ceaseless fire,
On which my endless tears were bootless spent Fairfax.

All these with ceaseless praise his works behold,
Both day and night. Milton.

Like an oak
That stands secure, though all the winds employ
Their ceaseless roar; and only sheds its leaves,
Or mast, which the revolving spring restores.
Philips.

CE'CITY. n. f. [cæcitas, Lat.] Blindness; privation of sight.

They are not blind, nor yet distinctly see; there is in them no cecity, yet more than a cecutiency; they have sight enough to discern the light, though not perhaps to distinguish objects or colours. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

CECU'TIENCY. n. f. [cæcutio, Lat.] Tendency to blindness; cloudiness of sight.

There is in them no cecity, yet more than a cecutiency. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

CE'DAR. n. f. [cedrus, Lat.] A tree.

It is evergreen; the leaves are much narrower than those of the pine tree, and many of them produced out of one tubercle, resembling a painter's pencil; it hath male flowers, or katkins, produced at remote distances from the fruit on the same tree. The seeds are produced in large cones, squamose and turbinated. The extention of the branches is very regular in cedar trees, the ends of the shoots declining, and thereby shewing their upper surface, which is constantly cloathed with green leaves, so regularly, as to appear at a distance like a green carpet; and, in waving about, make an agreeable prospect. It is surprising that this tree has not been more cultivated in England; for it would be a great ornament to barren bleak mountains, even in Scotland, where few other trees would grow; it being a native of Mount Libanus, where the snow continues most part of the year. Maundrel, in his travels, says, he measured one of the largest cedars on Mount Libanus, and found it to be twelve yards six inches in circumference, and sound. At about five or six yards from the ground, it was divided into five limbs, each of which was equal to a great tree. The wood of this famous tree is accounted proof against the putrefaction of animal bodies. The saw-dust is thought to be one of the secrets used by the mountebanks, who pretend to have the embalming mystery. This wood is also said to yield an oil, which is famous for preserving books and writings; and the wood is thought by Bacon to continue above a thousand years sound. Miller.

I must yield my body to the earth:
Thus yields the cedar to the axe's edge,
Whose arms gave shelter to the princely eagle;
Under whose shade the ramping lion slept;
Whose top branch over-peer'd Jove's spreading tree,
And kept low shrubs from winter's pow'rful wind. Shakspeare.

CE'DRINE. adj. [cedrinus, Lat.] Of or belonging to the cedar tree.

To CEIL. v. a. [cælo, Lat.] To overlay, or cover, the inner roof of a building.

And the greater house he ceiled with fir tree, which he overlaid with fine gold. 2 Chronicles.

How will he, from his house ceiled with cedar, be content with his Saviour's lot, not to have where to lay his head? Decay of Piety.

CE'ILING. n. f. [from ceil.] The inner roof.

Varnish makes ceilings not only shine, but last. Locke.

And now the thicken'd sky
Like a dark ceiling stood, down rush'd the rain
Impetuous. Milton's Paradise Lost.

So when the sun by day, or moon by night,
Strike on the polish'd baths the trembling light,
The glitt'ring species here and there divide,
And cast their dubious beams from side to side:
Now on the walls, now on the pavement play,
And to the ceiling climb the glaring day. Dryden.

CE'LANDINE. n. f. [chelidonium, Lat.] A plant.

The swallows use celandine, the linnet euphrasy. Mortimer.

CE'LATURE. n. f. [celatura, Lat.] The art of engraving or cutting in figures.

To CE'LEBRATE. v. a. [celebro, Lat.]

1. To praise; to commend; to give praise to; to make famous.

The songs of Sion were psalms and pieces of poetry, that adorned and celebrated the Supreme Being. Addison.

I would have him read over the celebrated works of antiquity, which have stood the test of so many different ages. Addison.

2. To distinguish by solemn rites; to perform solemnly.

He slew all them that were gone to celebrate the sabbath. 2 Maccabees.

On the feast day, the father cometh forth, after divine service, into a large room, where the feast is celebrated. Bacon.

3. To mention in a set or solemn manner, whether of joy or sorrow.

This pause of pow'r 'tis Ireland's hour to mourn;
While England celebrates your safe return. Dryden.

CELEBRA'TION. n. f. [from celebrate.]

1. Solemn performance; solemn remembrance.

He laboured to drive sorrow from her, and to hasten the celebration of their marriage. Sidney.

He shall conceal it,
While you are willing it shall come to note;
What time we will our celebration keep,
According to my birth. Shakspeare.

During the celebration of this holy sacrament, you attend earnestly to what is done by the priest. Taylor.

2. Praise; renown; memorial.

No more shall be added in this place, his memory deserving a particular celebration, than that his learning, piety, and virtue, have been attained by few. Clarendon.

Some of the ancients may be thought sometimes to have used a less number of letters, by the celebration of those who have added to their alphabet. Holder's Elements of Speech.

CELE'BRIOUS. adj. [celeber, Lat.] Famous; renowned; noted. Not in use.

The Jews, Jerusalem, and the Temple, having been always so celebrious; yet when, after their captivities, they were despoiled of their glory, even then the Assyrians, Greeks, and Romans, honoured with sacrifices the Most High God, whom that nation worshipped. Grew.

CELE'BRIOUSLY. adv. [from celebrious.] In a famous manner.

CELE'BRIOUSNESS. n. f. [from celebrious.] Renown; fame.

CELERY. n. f. A species of parsley: it is also called turnip rooted celery.

CELE'RITY. n. f. [celeritas, Lat.] Swiftness; speed; velocity.

We very well see in them, who thus plead a wonderful celerity of discourse for, perceiving at the first but only some couple of hypotheses, and fearless it should be cold, they are presently, in one and the self-same breath, resolved, that what by coming forever it read, there is no possibility it should be good. Hooker.

His former custom and practice was ever full of forwardness and celerity to make head against them. Bacon.

Thus, with imagin'd wings, our swift scene flies,
In motion with no less celerity
Than that of thought. Shakspeare.

The strokings concur to make a percussion great; the ligneity, the density, and the celerity of the body moved. Digby.

Whatever encreased the density of the blood, even without encreasing its celerity, heats, because a denser body is hotter than a rarer. Arbuthnot.

CE'LERY. n. f. A species of parsley.

CELE'STIAL. adj. [celestis, Lat.]

1. Heavenly; relating to the superiour regions.

There ſtay, until the twelve celeſtial ſigns
Have brought about their annual reckoning.
Shakſpeare.

The ancients commonly applied celeſtial deſcriptions of other climes to their own. Brown.

2. Heavenly; relating to the bleſſed ſtate.

Play that ſad note
I nam'd my knell, whilſt I ſit meditating
On that celeſtial harmony I go to. Shakſpeare.

3. Heavenly, with reſpect to excellence.

Canſt thou pretend deſire, whom zeal inflam'd
To worſhip, and a pow'r celeſtial nam'd? Dryd.

Telemachus, his bloomy face
Glowing celeſtial ſweet with godlike grace. Pope.

CELE'STIAL. n. ſ. [from the adj.] An inhabitant of heaven.

Thus affable and mild the prince precedes,
And to the dome th' unknown ceeſt'al leads.
Pope.

CELE'STIALLY. adv. [from celeſtial.] In a heavenly manner.

To CELE'STIFY. v. a. [from celeſtis, Lat.] To give ſomething of heavenly nature to any thing. Not uſed.

We ſhould affirm, that all things were in all things, that heaven were but earth terreſtrified, and earth but heaven celeſtified, or that each part above had influence upon its affinity below.
Brown's Vulgar Errours.

CE'LIACK. adj. [κοιλία, the belly.] Relating to the lower belly.

The blood moving ſlowly through the celiack and meſenterick arteries, produces complaints.
Arbuthnot on Aliments.

CE'LIBACY. n. ſ. [from celebs, Lat.] Single life; unmarried ſtate.

I can attribute their numbers to nothing but their frequent marriages; for they look on celibacy as an accurſed ſtate, and generally are married before twenty. Spectator.

By teaching them how to carry themſelves in their relations of huſbands and wives, parents and children, they have, without queſtion, adorned the goſpel, glorified God and benefited man, much more than they could have done in the devouteſt and ſtricteſt celibacy. Atterbury.

CE'LIBATE. n. ſ. [cælibatus, Lat.] Single life.

The males oblige themſelves to celibate, and then multiplication is hindered. Graunt.

CELL. n. ſ. [cella, Lat.]

1. A ſmall cavity or hollow place.

The brain contains ten thouſand cells;
In each ſome active fancy dwells. Prior.

How bees for ever, though a monarch reign,
Their ſep'rate cells and properties maintain. Pope.

2. The cave or little habitation of a religious perſon.

Beſides ſhe did intend confeſſion
At Patrick's cell this even'n; and there ſhe was not
Shakſpeare.

Your temples burned in their cement, and your franchiſes confined into an augre's bore. Shakſp.

There is a cement compounded of flour, whites of eggs, and ſtones powder'd, that becometh hard as marble. Bacon.

You may ſee divers pebbles, and a cruſt of cement or ſtone between them, as hard as the pebbles themſelves. Bacon.

The foundation was made of rough ſtone, joined together with a moſt firm cement; upon that was laid another layer, conſiſting of ſmall ſtones and cement. Arbuthnot on Coins.

2. Bond of union in friendſhip.

Let not the peace of virtue, which is ſet
Between us as the cement of our love,
To keep it builded, be the ram to batter. Shakſp.

What cement ſhould unite heaven and earth,
light and darkneſs? Glanville.

Look over the whole creation, and you ſhall ſee, that the band or cement, that holds together all the parts of this great and glorious fabrick, is gratitude. South.

To CEME'NT. v. a. [from the noun.] To unite by means of ſomething interpoſed.

But how the fear of us
May cement their diviſions, and bind up
The petty difference, we yet not know. Shakſp.

Liquid bodies have nothing to cement them; they are all looſe and incoherent, and in a perpetual flux: even an heap of ſand, or fine powder, will ſuffer no hollowneſs within them, though they be dry ſubſtances. Burnet.

Love with white lead cements his wings;
White lead was ſent us to repair
Two brighteſt, brittleſt, earthly things,
A lady's face and china ware. Swift.

To CEME'NT. v. n. To come into conjunction; to cohere.

When a wound is recent, and the parts of it are divided by a ſharp inſtrument, they will, if held in cloſe contact for ſome time, reunite by inoculation, and cement like one branch of a tree ingrafted on another. Sharp's Surgery.

CEMENTA'TION. n. ſ. [from cement.] The act of cementing, or uniting with cement.

CEME'NTER. n. ſ. [from cement.] A perſon or thing that unites in ſociety.

CHAME'LEON. n. ſ. [χαμαιλεων.]

The chameleon has four feet, and on each foot three claws. Its tail is long; with this, as well as with his feet, it faſtens itſelf to the branches of trees. Its tail is flat, its noſe long, in an obtuſe point; its back is ſharp, its ſkin plaited, and jagged like a ſaw from the neck to the laſt joint of the tail, and upon its head it has ſomething like a comb; like a fiſh, it has no neck Some have aſſerted, that it lives only upon air; but it has been obſerved to feed on flies, catched with its tongue, which is about ten inches long, and three thick; made of white fleſh, round, but flat at the end; or hollow and open, reſembling an elephant's trunk. It alſo ſhrinks, and grows longer. This animal is ſaid to aſſume the colour of thoſe things to which it is applied; but our modern obſervers aſſure us, that its natural colour, when at reſt and in the ſhade, is a bluiſh grey; though ſome are yellow, and others green, but both of a ſmaller kind. When it is expoſed to the ſun, the grey changes into a darker grey, inclining to a dun colour; and its parts, which have leaſt of the light upon them, are changed into ſpots of different colours. The grain of its ſkin, when the light doth not ſhine upon it, is like cloth mixed with many colours. Sometimes, when it is handled, it ſeems ſpeckled with dark ſpots, inclining to green. If it be put upon a black hat, it appears to be of a violet colour, and ſometimes, if it be wrapped up in linen, it is white; but it changes colour only in ſome parts of the body. Calmet

A chameleon is a creature about the bigneſs of an ordinary hound; his head unproportionably big, and his eyes great; he moveth his head without writhing of his neck, which is inflexible, as a hog doth; his back crooked, his ſkin ſpotted with little tumours, leſs eminent nearer the belly; his tail ſlender and long; on each foot he hath five fingers, three on the outſide, and two on the inſide; his tongue of a marvellous length in reſpect of his body, and hollow at the end, which he will launch out to prey upon flies; of colour green, and of a duſky yellow, brighter and whiter towards the belly, yet ſpotted with blue, white and red. Bacon

I could add colours even to the chameleon;
Change ſhapes with Proteus, for advantage.
Shakſpeare

One part devours the other, and leaves not ſo much as a mouthful of that popular air, which the chameleon gaſps after Decay of Piety.

The tun chameleon, fed with air receives
The colour of the thing to which he cleaves
Dryden

As the chameleon, who can laſt no food
To live on color all his creature,
But borrows from his neighbour's hue
His wiſhes and his hopes, is mine Prior

Deuteronomy.

CHA'MOMILE. n. ſ. [χαμαιμηλον.] An odoriferous plant.

Cool violets, and orpine growing ſtill,
Embathed balm, and cheriſhing dill,
Freſh coſtmary, and breathful chamomile,
Dull poppy, and drink quick'ning ſtuluc. Spenſ.

For though the chamomile, the more it is trodden on the faſter it grows; yet youth, the more it is waſted, the ſooner it wears. Shak.

Poſſet drink with chamomile flowers. Bacon.

To CHAMP. v. a. [champayer, Fr.]

1. To bite with a frequent action of the teeth.

Coffee and opium are taken down, tobacco by in ſmoke, and betel is but champed in the mouth with a little lime. Bacon.

The fiend replied, not overcome with rage;
But, like a proud ſteed reſtrain'd, went haughtily on,

At his command
The ſteeds equipp'd with purple ſtand,
And champ betwixt their teeth the foaming gold
Dryd.

2. To devour, with violent action of the teeth.

A tobacco pipe happened to break in my mouth, and the pieces left ſuch a delicious tongue-nels on my tongue, that I champed up the remaining part. Spectator.

To CHAMP. v. n. To perform frequently the action of biting.

Muttering and champing, as though his bit had troubled him, he gave occaſion to Meſſalina to come near him Sidney.

They began to repent of that they had done, and ruefully to champ upon the bit they had taken into their mouths. Hooker.

His jaws did not anſwer equally to one another; but, by his frequent motion and champing with them, it was evident they were neither luxated nor fractured. Wiſeman.

CHA'MPAIGN. n. ſ. [campagne, Fr.] A flat open country.

In the abuſes of the cuſtoms, meſeems, you have a fair champaign laid open to you, in which you may at large ſketch out your diſcourſe.
Spenſer's State of Ireland.

Of all theſe bounds,
With ſhadowy foreſts and with champaigns rich'd,
We make thee lady Shakſp.

If two bordering princes have their territory meeting on an open champaign, the more mighty will commonly ſeek occaſion to extend his bounds unto the further border thereof. Raleigh.

Sir John Norris maintained a retreat without diſorder, by the ſpace of ſome miles, part of the way champaign, up to the city of Ghent, with leſs loſs of men than the enemy. Bacon.

From his ſide two rivers flow'd,
Th' one winding, th' other ſtraight, and left between
Fair champaign, with leſs rivers interven'd.
Milton.

CHA'MPERTORS. n. ſ. [from champerty. In law.] Such as move ſuits, or cauſe them to be moved, either by their own or others procurement, and purſue, at their proper coſts, to have part of the land in conteſt, or part of the gains. Cowell.

CHA'MPERTY. n. ſ. [champart, Fr. In law.] A maintenance of any man in his ſuit, while depending, upon condition to have part of the thing when it is recovered. Cowell.

CHA'MPION. n. ſ. [champion, Fr. campio, low Lat.]

1. A man who undertakes a cauſe in ſingle combat.

In many armies, the matter ſhould be tried by duel between two champions. Bacon.

For hot, cold, moiſt, and dry, four champions fierce
Strive here for maſt'ry, and to battle bring
Their embryon atoms. Milton's Par. Loſt.

O light of Trojans, and support of Troy,
Thy father's champion, and thy country's joy!
Dryden.

At length the adverse admirals appear,
The two bold champions of each country's right.
Dryden.

2. A hero; a ſtout warriour; one bold in conteſt.

A ſtouter champion never handled ſword.
Shakſpeare.

This makes you incapable of conviction; and they applaud themſelves as at Duns champions for truth, when moved they are contending for error.
Locke.

3. In law.

In our common law, champion is taken no leſs for him that tries the combat in his own cauſe, than for him that fights in the cauſe of another.
Cowell.

To CHA'MPION. v. n. [from the noun.] To challenge to the combat.

The ſeed of Banquo kings!
Rather than ſo, come, Fate, into the liſt,
And champion me to the utterance.
Shakſpeare.

CHANCE. n. ſ. [chance, Fr.]

1. Fortune; the cauſe of fortuitous events.

And unforeſeen accidents ſuddenly
Or what we wilfully do, we weep unto
Ourſelves to be the ſlaves of chance, and flies
Or every wind that blows.
Shakſpeare.

The only true, or at leaſt moſt valuable thing
To ſet my mind, was worth the conquering.
Dryden.

Chance is a mere name, and really nothing in nature, a conception of our minds, and only a compendious way of ſpeaking, whereby we would expreſs, that ſuch effects as are commonly aſcribed to chance, were really produced by ſome true and proper cauſes, but without any deſign to produce them.
Bentley.

2. Fortune; the act of fortune; what fortune may bring: applied to perſons.

[illegible] commonly uſed to vex, but ſeldom kill us.
Bacon's Eſſays.

3. Accident; caſual occurrence; fortuitous event.

To lay a deſign upon the ſucceſs of any thing in this world, is not preſumption, but a moſt ridiculous madneſs, ſeeing there are ſo many chances that muſt intervene, of which no human power can poſſibly have the diſpoſal.
South.

The beauty I beheld has ſtruck me dead,
Unknowingly the ſtrokes, and kiſs'd the chance;
Poiſon is in her eyes, and death in every glance.
Dryden.

All nature is but art, unknown to thee;
All chance direction, which thou canſt not ſee.
Pope.

4. Event; ſucceſs; luck: applied to things.

Now we'll together, and the chance of goodneſs
Be like our warranted quarrel!
Shakſpeare.

5. Misfortune; unlucky accident.

You were us'd
To ſay extremity was the trier of ſpirits,
That common chances common men could bear.
Shakſpeare.

6. Poſſibility of any occurrence.

A chance, but chance may lead, where I may meet
Some wand'ring ſpirit of heav'n, by fountain ſide,
Or in thick ſhade retir'd.
Milton's Par. Loſt.

Then your Ladyſhip might have a chance to chaſe this addreſs.
Swift.

CHANCE. adj. [It is ſeldom uſed but in compoſition.] Happening by chance.

Now ſhould they part, malicious tongues would ſay,
They met like chance companions on the way.
Dryden.

I would not take the gift,
Which, like a toy dropt from the hands of fortune,
Lay for the next chance comer.
Dryden.

To CHANCE. v. n. [from the noun.] To happen; to fall out; to fortune.

Think what a chance thou chanceſt on; but think——
Thou haſt thy miſtreſs ſtill.
Shakſpeare.

How chance thou art not with the prince thy brother?
Shakſpeare.

Ay, Caſca, tell us what hath chanc'd to-day,
That Cæſar looks ſo ſad.
Shakſpeare.

He chanced upon divers of the Turks victuallers, whom he eaſily took.
Knolles' Hiſt. of the Turks.

I chuſe the laſer ſex, and chance to find
A river's mouth impervious to the wind.
Pope.

CHANCE-MEDLEY. n. ſ. [from chance and medley. In law.] The caſual ſlaughter of a man, not altogether without the fault of the ſlayer, when ignorance or negligence is joined with the chance; as if a man lop trees by an highway-ſide, by which many uſually travel, and caſt down a bough, not giving warning to take heed thereof, by which bough one paſſing by is ſlain; in this caſe he offends, becauſe he gave no warning, that the party might have taken heed to himſelf.
Cowell.

If [illegible] ſhould [illegible] at any time, to ſtrike a man dead with a direct ſaying, it ought, in that caſe and conſcience, to be adjudged [illegible]
Sa[illegible]

CHA'NCEABLE. adj. [from chance.] Accidental.

[illegible] ſwept off by the [illegible] coming [illegible] of Peter.

CHA'NCELLOR. n. ſ. [cancellarius, Lat chancellor, Fr. from cancellare, literas vel ſcriptum linea per modum ductâ diverſante; and ſeemeth of itſelf likewiſe to be derived à cancellis, which ſignifies all one with cancri, a lattice; that is, a thing made of wood or iron bars, laid croſſways one over another, ſo that a man may ſee through them in and out. It may be thought that judgment ſeats were compaſſed in with bars, to defend the judges and other officers from the preſs of the multitude, and yet not to hinder any man's view.

Quæſitas regni tibi cancellarius Angli,
Primus ſublimi monte petendus erit.
Hic eſt, qui regni leges conciliat iniquas,
Et mandata pii principis æqua facit.
Verſes of Nigel de Wickre to the biſhop of Ely, chancellor to Richard I.]

1. The higheſt judge of the law.

Cancellarius, at the firſt, ſignified the regiſters or actuaries in court; præpoſitus, ſcriptas ſententias & excipiendo judicum acta diligenter curans. But this name is greatly advanced, and, not only in other kingdoms but in this, is given to him that is the chief judge in cauſes of property; for the chancellor hath power to moderate and temper the written law, and ſubjecteth himſelf only to the law of nature and conſcience.
Cowel.

Turn out, you rogue! how like a beaſt you lie!
Go, buckle to the law. Is this an hour
To ſtretch your limbs? you'll ne'er be chancellor.
Dryden's Juv.

Ariſtides was a perſon of the ſtricteſt juſtice, and beſt acquainted with the laws, as well as forms, of their government; ſo that he was in a manner, chancellor of Athens.
Swift.

2. CHANCELLOR in the Eccleſiaſtical Court. A biſhop's lawyer; a man trained up in the civil and canon law, to direct the biſhops in matters of judgment, relating as well to criminal as to civil affairs in the church.
Ayliffe.

1. A child left or taken in the place of another.

And her baſe elfin breed there for thee left
Such men do changelings call, ſo chang'd by fairies theft. Spenſer's Fairy Queen.

She, as her attendant, hath
A lovely boy ſtol'n from an Indian king;
She never had ſo ſweet a changeling. Shak.

2. An idiot; a fool; a natural.

Changelings and fools of heav'n, and thence ſhut out,
We only roam in diſcontent about. Dry.

Would any one be a changeling, becauſe he is leſs determined by wiſe conſiderations than a wiſe man? Locke.

3. One apt to change; a waverer.

Of fickle changelings and poor diſcontents,
That gape and rub the elbow at the news
Of hurly-burly innovation. Shakſpeare.

'Twas not long
Before from world to world they ſwung;
As they had turn'd from ſide to ſide,
And as they changelings liv'd, they died. Hudibras.

4. Any thing changed and put in the place of another: in ludicrous ſpeech.

I took the writ up in form of the other,
Subſcribed it, gave the impreſſion, plac'd it faſter,
The changeling never known. Shak.

CHA'NNEL. n. ſ. [canal, Fr. canalis, Lat.]

1. The hollow bed of running waters.

It is not to eaſy, now that things are grown into an habit, and have their certain courſe, to change the channel, and turn their ſtreams into other way. Spenſer's State of Ireland.

Draw them to Tyber's bank, and weep your tears
Into the channel, till the loweſt ſtream
Do kiſs the moſt exalted ſhores of all. Shak.

So th' impriſon'd ſea, which, from her wonted courſe,
To gain ſome acres, avarice did force;
If the new banks, neglected once, decay,
No longer will from her old channel ſtay. Waller.

Had not the ſaid ſtrata been diſlocated, ſome of them elevated, and others depreſſed, there would have been no cavity or channel to give reception to the water of the ſea. Woodward.

The tops of mountains and hills will be continually waſhed down by the rains, and the channels of rivers abraded by the ſtreams. Burnet.

2. Any cavity drawn longwiſe.

Complaint and hot deſires, the lover's hell,
And ſcalding tears, that wore a channel where they fell. Dryden's Fables.

And chang'd to snowy plumes his hoary hair,
And wing'd his flight to chant aloft in air. Dryd.

CHANT. n. s. [from the verb] Song; melody.

A pleasant grove,
With chant of tuneful birds resounding loud.
Milton.

CHA'NTER. n. s. [from chant.] A singer; a songster.

You curious chanters of the wood,
That warble forth dame Nature's lays. Watton.

Jove's ethereal lays, resistless fire,
The chanter's soul and raptur'd song inspire,
Instinct divine! nor blame severe his choice,
Warbling the Grecian woes with harp and voice.
Pope.

CHA'NTICLEER. n. s. [from chanter and clur, Fr.] The name given to the cock, from the clearness and loudness of his crow.

And chearful chant cleer, with his note shrill,
Had warned once, that Phœbus' fiery car
In haste was climbing up the eastern hill. Spenser.

Hark, hark, I hear
The strain of strutting chanticleer. Shakspeare.

Stay, the chearful chanticleer
Tells you that the time is near. Ben Jonson.

These verses were mentioned by Chaucer in the description of the sudden fit, and panical fear, when Chanticleer the cock was carried away by Reynard the fox. Camden's Remains.

Within this homestead liv'd without a peer,
For crowing loud, the noble chanticleer. Dryden.

CHA'NTRESS. n. s. [from chant.] A woman singer.

Sweet bird, that shunn'st the noise of folly,
Most musical, most melancholy!
Thee, chantress of the woods among,
I woo to hear thy even-song. Milton.

CHA'NTRY. n. s. [from chant.] A church or chapel endowed with lands, or other yearly revenue for the maintenance of one or more priests, daily to sing mass for the souls of the donors, and such others as they appoint. Cowell.

Now go with me, and with this holy man,
Into the chantry by;
And, underneath that consecrated roof,
Plight me the full assurance of your faith. Shakſ.

CHA'OS. n. s. [chaos, Lat. χάος.]

1. The mass of matter supposed to be in confusion before it was divided by the creation into its proper classes and elements.

The whole universe would have been a confused chaos, without beauty or order. Bentley.

2. Confusion; irregular mixture.

Had I followed the wurst, I could not have brought church and state to such a chaos of confusions, as some have done. K. Charles.

Their reason sleeps, but mimick fancy wakes,
Supplies her parts, and wild ideas takes
From words and things, ill sorted, and mis-join'd;
The anarchy of thought, and chaos of the mind.
Dryden.

3. Any thing where the parts are undistinguished.

We shall have nothing but darkness and a chaos within, whatever order and light there be in things without us. Locke.

Pleas'd with a work, where nothing's just or fit,
One glaring chaos and wild heap of wit. Pope.

CHAO'TICK. adj. [from chaos.] Resembling chaos; confused.

When the terraqueous globe was in a chaotick state, and the earthy particles fashioned, then those several beds were, in all probability, repositted in the earth. Dorham.

To CHAP. v. a. [kappen, Dutch, to cut. This word seems originally the same with chop; nor were they probably distinguished at first, otherwise than by accident; but they have now a meaning something different, though referable to the same original sense.] To break into hiatus, or gapings.

It weakened more and more the arch of the earth, drying it immoderately, and chapping it in sundry places. Burnet.

Then would unbalanc'd heat licentious reign,
Crack the dry hill, and chap the russet plain.
Blackmore.

CHAP. n. s. [from the verb.] A cleft; an aperture; an opening; a gaping; a chink.

What moisture the heat of the summer sucks out of the earth, it is repaid in the rains of the next winter; and what chaps are made in it, are filled up again. Burnet's Theory.

CHAP. n. s. [This is not often used, except by anatomists, in the singular.] The upper or under part of a beast's mouth.

Froth fills his chaps, he sends a grunting sound,

Hold, Warwick! ſeek thee out ſome other chaſe.

For I myſelf muſt put this deer to death. Shak.

Honour's the nobleſt chaſe; purſue that game,
And recompenſe the loſs of love with fame.
Granville.

7. Open ground ſtored with ſuch beaſts as are hunted.

A receptacle for deer and game, of a middle nature between a foreſt and a park; being commonly leſs than a foreſt, and not endued with ſo many liberties; and yet of a larger compaſs, and ſtored with greater diverſity of game, than a park. A chaſe differs from a foreſt in this, becauſe it may be in the hands of a ſubject, which a foreſt, in its proper nature, cannot: and from a park, that it is not incloſed, and hath not only a larger compaſs, and more ſtore of game, but likewiſe more keepers and overſeers. Cowel.

He and his lady both are at the lodge,
Upon the north ſide of this pleaſant chaſe. Shak.

8. The CHASE of a gun, is the whole bore or length of a piece, taken within-ſide. Chambers.

Seldom is the world affrighted or chaſtiſed with plans or prodigies, earthquakes or inundations, famines or plagues. Green's Collection of Sacred.

Like you, commiſſion'd to chaſtiſe and kill,
He muſt avenge the world, and give it peace.
Prior.

2. To reduce to order, or obedience; to repreſs; to reſtrain; to awe.

Hie thee hither,
That I may pour my ſpirit in thine ears,
And chaſtiſe with the valour of my tongue,
All that impedes thee. Shakſpeare.

Know ſir, that I
Will not wait pinion'd at your maſter's court,
Nor once be chaſtiſed with the ſober eye
Of dull Octavia Shakſpeare.

The gay ſocial ſenſe
By decency chaſtiſed. Thomſon.

CHASTI'SEMENT. n. ſ. [chaſtiment, Fr.] Correction; puniſhment: commonly, though not always, uſed of domeſtick or parental puniſhment.

Shall I refuſe with honour my fair dears,
On equal terms to give him chaſtiſement?
Shakſpeare.

He held the chaſtiſement of one, whom mocked the ſee of Rome, peculiar to God. Raleigh.

For ſeven years what can a child be guilty of, but lying, or ill-natured tricks; the repeated commiſſion of which ſhall bring him to the chaſtiſement of the rod. Locke.

He receives a ſit of ſickneſs as the kind chaſtiſement and diſcipline of his heavenly Father, to wean his affections from the world Bentley.

1. To grind with the teeth; to maſticate.

Firſt to the pulſe, preſcribed by old Pythagoras,
Commanding ſilence, and a wary eye,
Whilſt temperate nature, mother of health,
Wholeſome herbs, and ſalads, ſwallow'd, and chewed,
And laſtly fruits. Shakſpeare.

Pierc'd through the cheek,
Chew'd with the teeth of ſweet and bitter fancy. Shak.

Thoſe that never ſuck'd the breaſt,
Nor felt the ſtabs. Dryden's Juvenal.

To corn-growing fields, where the lowing herd
Chew the cud on paſture. Philips.

Our food, having undergone a diſſolution in the ſtomach, is divided into ſmall parts, and in a human body, there is no other inſtrument neceſſary to this action but the teeth: the ſaliva, and other liquors, the ſpittle and mucous matter ſeparated from the glands, and mixed with the food, with a motion of the long muſcles, and from the alimentary canal of chyle. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. To meditate; to ruminate in the thoughts.

Where the fierce monk does at his trial ſtand,
He chews revenge, abjuring his offence;
Smiles in his tongue, and murder in his hand,
He ſtabs his judge to proſe his innocence. Prior.

3. To taſte without ſwallowing.

Heaven's in my mouth,
As if I did but only chew his name. Shakſpeare.

Some books are to be taſted, others to be ſwallowed, and ſome few to be chewed and digeſted: that is, ſome books are to be read only in parts; others to be read, but not curiouſly; and ſome few to be read wholly, with attention. Bacon.

To CHEW. v. n. To champ upon; to ruminate.

I will with patience hear, and find a time;
Till then, my noble friend, chew upon this. Shakſpeare.

Inculcate the doctrine of diſobedience, and then leave the multitude to chew upon it. L'Eſtrange.

Old paſt plans chew on wiſdom paſt,
And blunder on in buſineſs to the laſt. Pope.

CHICA'NE. n. ſ. [chicane, Fr. derived by Menage from the Spaniſh word chico, little.]

1. The art of protracting a conteſt by petty objection and artifice.

The general part of the civil law concerns not the chicane of private cauſes, but the affairs and intercourſe of civilized nations, grounded upon the principles of reaſon. Locke.

His attornies have hardly one trick left; they are at the end of all their chicane. Johnſon.

2. Artifice in general. This ſenſe is only in familiar language.

Unwilling to try arms to meet,
He ſtrove to lengthen the campaign,
And ſave his forces by chicane. Prior.

CHI'CKEN. } Dutch. Chicken is, I believe, the old plural of chick, though now uſed as a ſingular noun.]

1. The young of a bird, particularly of a hen, or ſmall bird.

All my pretty ones!
Did you ſay all? what! all my pretty chickens, and their dam,
At one fell ſwoop? Shakſpeare.

But when the ſhell is broke, out comes a chick. Dryden.

While it is a chick, and hath no ſpurs, not cannot hurt, nor hath ſeen the motion, yet it readily purſues that. Hale.

Even ſince ſhe was a ſeven-night old, they ſay,
Was chaſte and humble to her dying day;
Nor chick, nor hen, was known to diſobey. Dryd.

Having the notion that one laid the egg out of which the other was hatched, I have a clear idea of the relation of dam and chick. Locke.

O ranny days alone I dine,
Upon a chick and pint of wine
On rainy days I dine alone,
And pick my chicken to the bone. Swift.

2. A word of tenderneſs.

My Ariel, chick,
That is thy charge. Shakſpeare.

As thy ſword hath made women childleſs, ſo ſhall thy mother be childleſs among women. 1 Samuel.
A man ſhall ſee the nobleſt works and foundations have proceeded from childleſs men; which have ſought to expreſs the images of their minds, where thoſe of their bodies have failed: ſo the care of poſterity is moſt in them that have no poſterity. Bacon's Eſſays.
Childleſs thou art, childleſs remain; ſo death
Shall be deceiv'd his glut. Milton.
She can give the reaſon why one died childleſs. Spectator.

CHI'LDLIKE. adj. [from child and like.] Becoming or beſeeming a child.
Who can owe no leſs than childlike obedience to her that hath more than motherly care. Hooker.
I thought the remnant of mine age
Should have been cheriſh'd by her childlike duty. Shakſpeare.

CHI'LIAD. n. ſ. [from χιλιας.] A thouſand; a collection or ſum containing a thouſand.
We make cycles and periods of years, as decades, centuries, chiliads, for the uſe of computation in hiſtory. Holder.

CHILIA'EDRON. n. ſ. [from χιλια.] A figure of a thouſand ſides.
In a man, who ſpeaks of a chiliaedron, or a body of a thouſand ſides, the idea of the figure may be very confuſed, though that of the number be very diſtinct. Locke.

CHILIFA'CTIVE. } adj. [from chyle. See
CHILIFA'CTORY. } CHYLIFACTIVE.] That has the quality of making chyle.
Whether this be not effected by ſome way of corroſion, rather than any proper digeſtion, chilifactive mutation, or alimental converſion. Brown's Vulgar Errour.
We ſhould rather rely upon a chilifactory inſtruum, or digeſtive preparation drawn from ſpecies or individuals, whoſe ſtomachs peculiarly diſſolve lapideous bodies. Brown.

CHILIFICA'TION. n. ſ. [See CHYLIFICATION.] The act of making chyle.
Not will we affirm that iron is indigeſted in the ſtomach of the oſtriche; but we ſuſpect this effect to proceed not from any liquid reduction, or tendence to chilification, by the power of natural heat. Brown's Vulg. Er.

CHILL. adj. [cele, Sax.]
1. Cold; that is cold to the touch.
And all my plants I ſave from nightly ill,
Of noiſome winds, and blaſting vapours chill. Milton.
2. Cold; having the ſenſation of cold; ſhivering with cold.
My heart and my chill veins freeze with deſpair. Rowe.
3. Dull; not warm; not forward: as, a chill reception.
4. Depreſſed; dejected; diſcouraged.
5. Unaffectionate; cold of temper.

CHILL. n. ſ. [from the adjective.] Chilneſs; cold.
I very well know one to have a fort of chill about his pericardia and head. Decay.

To CHILL. v. a. [from the adjective.]
1. To make cold.
Age has not yet
So ſhrunk my ſinews, or to chill'd my veins,
But conſcious virtue in my breaſt remains. Dryd.
Heat burns his riſe, froſt chills his ſetting beams,
And vex the world with oppoſite extremes. Creech.
Each changing ſeaſon does its poiſon bring;
Rheums chill the winter, agues blaſt the ſpring. Prior.
Now no more the drum
Provokes to arms; or trumpet's clangor ſhrill
Affrights the wives, or chills the virgin's blood. Philips.
2. To depreſs; to deject; to diſcourage.
Every thought on God chills the gaiety of our ſpirits, and awakens terrors which he cannot bear. Rogers.
3. To blaſt with cold.
The fruits periſh on the ground,
Or ſoon decay, by ſnows immod'rate chill'd,
By winds are blaſted, or by lightning kill'd. Blackmore.

CHI'LLINESS. n. ſ. [from chilly.] A ſenſation of ſhivering cold.
If the patient ſurvives three days, the acuteneſs of the pain abates, and a chillineſs or ſhivering affects the body. Arbuthnot.

CHI'LLY. adj. [from chill.] Somewhat cold.
A chilly ſweat bedews
My ſhudd'ring limbs. Philips.

CHI'LNESS. n. ſ. [from chill.] Coldneſs want of warmth.
If you come out of the ſun ſuddenly into a ſhade, there followeth a chilneſs or ſhivering in all the body. Bacon.

This while he thinks, he lifts aloft his dart,
A generous thirſt ſeizes ev'ry part,
The veins pour back the blood, and fortify the heart. Dryden.

CHIME. n. ſ. [kime, Dutch.] The end of a barrel or tub.

CHIME. n. ſ. [The original of this word is doubtful. Junius and Minſhew ſuppoſe it corrupted from cimbal; Skinner from gamme, or gamut; Henſhaw, from chiamare, to call, becauſe the chime calls to church. Perhaps it is only ſoftened from chirme, or churm, an old word for the ſound of many voices, or inſtruments making a noiſe together.]

1. The conſonant or harmonick ſound of many correſpondent inſtruments.
Hang our ſhaggy thighs with bells?
That, as we do ſtrike a tune,
In our dance ſhall make a chime. Ben Jonſon.
The ſound
Of inſtruments, that made melodious chime,
Was heard, of harp and organ. Milton
Love virtue, ſhe alone is free;
She can teach you how to climb
Higher than the ſphery chime. Milton.

2. The correſpondence of ſound.
Love firſt invented verſe, and form'd the thime,
The motion meaſur'd, harmoniz'd the chime.
Dryden

3. The ſound of bells, not rung by ropes, but ſtruck with hammers. In this ſenſe it is always uſed in the plural, chimes.
We have heard the chimes at midnight. Shakſ.

4. The correſpondence of proportion or relation.
The conceptions of things are placed in their ſeveral degrees of ſimilitude; as in ſeveral proportions, one to another; in which harmonious chimes, the voice of reaſon is often drowned. Grew

To CHIME. v. n. [from the noun]

1. To ſound in harmony or conſonance.
To make the tough recital aptly chime,
Or bring the ſum of Gallia's loſs to rhime,
'Tis mighty hard. Prior

2. To correſpond in relation or proportion.
Father and ſon, huſband and wife, and ſuch other correlative terms, do belong one to another, and, through cuſtom, do readily chime, and anſwer one another, in people's memories. Locke.

3. To agree; to fall in with.
He not only ſat quietly and heard his father railed at, but often chimed in with the diſcourſe. Arbuthnot's Hiſt. of John Bull.

4. To ſuit with; to agree.
Any ſect, whoſe reaſonings, interpretations, and language, I have been uſed to, will, of courſe, make all chime that way; and make another, and perhaps the genuine meaning of the author, ſeem harſh, ſtrange, and uncouth to me. Locke.

5. To jingle; to clatter.
But with the meaner tribe I'm forc'd to chime,
And, wanting ſtrength to riſe, deſcend to rhime. Smith.

To CHIME. v. a.

1. To move, or ſtrike, or cauſe to ſound harmonically, or with juſt conſonancy.
With lifted arms they order ev'ry blow,
And chime their ſounding hammers in a row:
With labour'd anvil Ætna groans below. Dryd.

2. To ſtrike a bell with a hammer.

CHIME'RA. n. ſ. [Chimæra, Lat.] A vain and wild fancy, as remote from reality as the exiſtence of the poetical Chimera, a monſter feigned to have the head of a lion, the belly of a goat, and the tail of a dragon.
In ſhort, the force of dreams is of a piece,
Chimeras all, and more abſurd, or leſs. Dryden.
No body joins the voice of a ſheep with the ſhape of a horſe, to be the complex ideas of any real ſubſtances, unleſs he has a mind to fill his head with chimeras, and his diſcourſe with unintelligible words. Locke.

CHIME'RICAL. adj. [from chimera.] Imaginary; fanciful; wildly, vainly, or fantaſtically conceived; fantaſtick.
Notwithſtanding the fineneſs of this allegory may atone for it in ſome meaſure, I cannot think that perſons of ſuch a chimerical exiſtence are proper actors in an epic poem. Spectator.

CHIME'RICALLY. adv. [from chimerical.] Vainly; wildly; fantaſtically.

CHI'MINAGE. n. ſ. [from chimin, an old law word for a road.] A toll for paſſage through a foreſt. Cowell.

CHIMNEY-CORNER. n. ſ. [from chimney and corner.] The fire-ſide; the ſeat on each end of the fire-grate: uſually noted in proverbial language for being the place of idlers.
Yet ſome of them
Tell ſtories of you in their chimney-corner,
Dryden.

CHI'MNEYPIECE. n. ſ. [from chimney and piece.] The ornamental piece of wood, or ſtone, that is ſet round the fire-place.
Perth and Brighton the marble hearths and chimneypieces with a clout dipt in greaſe. Swift.

CHI'MNEYSWEEPER. n. ſ. [from chimney and ſweeper.]

1. One whoſe trade it is to clean foul chimnies of ſoot.
To look like her, are chimney-ſweepers black;
And ſince her time are colliers counted bright. Shakſpeare.
The little chimney-ſweeper ſkulks along,
And marks with ſooty ſtains the heedleſs throng. Gay.
Even lying Ned, the chimney-ſweeper of Savoy, and Tom the Portugal duſtman, put in their claims. Arbuthnot.

2. It is uſed proverbially for one of a mean and vile occupation.
Golden lads and girls, all muſt,
As chimney-ſweepers, come to duſt. Shakſpeare.

CHIN. n. ſ. [cinne, Sax. kinn, Germ.] The part of the face beneath the under lip.
But all the words I could get of her, was wiping her waiſt, and thruſting out her chin. Sidney
With his Amazonian chin he drove
The briſtled lips before him. Shakſpeare.
He rain'd his hardy head, which ſunk again,
And ſtriking on his boſom, knock'd his chin.
Dryden

CHI'NA. n. ſ. [from China, the country where it is made.] China ware; porcelain; a ſpecies of veſſels made in China, dimly tranſparent, partaking of the qualities of earth and glaſs. They are made by mingling two kinds of earth, of which one eaſily vitrifies; the other reſiſts a very ſtrong heat: when the vitrifiable earth is melted into glaſs, they are completely burnt.
Spleen, vapours, or ſmall-pox above them all;
And miſtreſs of herſelf, tho' china fall. Pope.
After ſupper, carry your plate and china together in the ſame baſket. Swift.

CHINA-ORANGE. n. ſ. [from China and orange.] The ſweet orange; brought originally from China.
Not many years have the China-orange been propagated in Portugal and Spain. Mortimer.

CHI'NA-ROOT. n. ſ. [from China and root.] A medicinal root, brought originally from China.

CHI'NCOUGH. n. ſ. [perhaps more properly kincough, from kinckin, to pant, Dutch, and cough.] A violent and convulſive cough, to which children are ſubject.
I have obſerved a chincough complicated with an intermitting fever. Floyer on the Humours.

CHINE. n. ſ. [eſchine, Fr. ſchiena, Ital. ſpina, Lat. cein, Arm.]

1. The part of the back in which the ſpine or backbone is found.
She ſtrikes him ſuch a blow upon his chine that ſhe opened all his body. Sidney.
He preſſes her with the tuſky head,
And chine with riſing briſtles roughly ſpread. Dryden.

2. A piece of the back of an animal.
Cut out the laſily boned clown in chines of beef ere thou ſleep. Shakſpeare.
He had killed eight fat hogs for this ſeaſon, and he had cut about his chines very liberally amongſt his neighbours. Spectator.

To CHINE. v. a. [from the noun.] To cut into chines
He that in his line did chine the long ribbed Appenine. Dryden.

CHINK. n. ſ. [cinan, to gape, Sax.] A ſmall aperture longwiſe; an opening or gap between the parts of any thing.
Pyramus and Thiſbe did talk through the chink of a wall. Shakſp. Midſum. Night's Dream.
Plagues alſo have been raiſed by anointing the chinks of doors, and the like. Bacon's Nat. Hiſt.
Though birds have no epiglottis, yet they ſo contract the chink of their larinx, as to prevent the admiſſion of wet or dry ingeſted. Brown.
Other inventions, falſe and abſurd, that are like ſo many chinks and holes to diſcover the rottenneſs of the whole fabrick. South.
In vain the ſexton ſtop'd each cranny of the houſe,
Each gaping chink impervious to a mouſe. Swift.

To CHINK. v. a. [derived by Skinner from the ſound.] To ſhake ſo as to make a ſound.
He chinks his purſe, and takes his ſeat of ſtate;
With ready quills the dedicators wait. Pope.

To CHINK. v. n. To ſound by ſtriking each other.
Lord Strutt's money ſhines as bright, and chinks as well, as Squire South's. Arbuthnot.
When not a guinea chink'd on Martin's boards,
And Atwill's ſkill was drain'd of all his hoards. Swift.

CHI'NKY. adj. [from chink.] Full of holes; gaping; opening into narrow clefts.

But plaister thou the chinky hives with clay
Dryden's Virgil

Grimalkin, to domestick vermin sworn
An everlasting foe, with watchful eye
Lies nightly brooding o'er a chinky gap,
Protencing her fell claws, to thoughtless mice
Sure ruin. Philips's Pastorals

CHINTS n. s. Cloth of cotton made in India, and printed with colours.

Let a shrinking chintz, and Bluff's lace,
Wrap my cold limbs, and shade my pale face
Prior

CHI'OPPINE. n. s. [from chapin, Span.] A high shoe, formerly worn by ladies.

Your ladyship is nearer to heaven than when I saw you last, by the altitude of a chiopine.
Shakspeare

The woman was a giantess, and yet was but always in chiopines.

CHIP, CHEAP, CHIPPING, in the names of places, imply a market; from the Saxon ceppan, ceapan, to buy. Gibson

To CHIP. v. a. [probably corrupted from clip.] To cut into small pieces; to diminish, by cutting away a little at a time.

His mangled myrmydons,
No sooner learn the danger gone from home,
But they begin to play. Shakspeare's Coriolanus

To return to our statues: the block of marble, we see, is first only hewed or chipped, sometimes rough hewn, and but sketched into a human figure. Dryden's Dufresnoy

The cock it treads out all the rest can find,
And 'tis even to the butcher's self unkind.
Kings but slay
Taught him to chip the wool, and how the fleece
Tate

CHIP. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A small piece taken off by a cutting instrument.

Carpenters do extremely affect manure, and extol it by themselves, which is but a chip for their lord.
Peacham

That chip in the beak swam, not by the power.
Taylor

The stew was laid below,
Of chips and screw-wood was the feeding straw
Dryden's Fables

2. A small piece, however made.

The mariners have on the seas in lumps wrecked, in an irregular manner, among clay, spar, and chips of stone.
Woodward

CHI'PPING. n. s. [from To chip.] A fragment cut off.

They dung their land with the chippings of a sort of soft stone.
Carew's Survey of Cornwall

The chippings and filings of these jewels, could they be preserved, are of more value than the whole mines of Germany.
Boyle

CHIRA'GRICAL adj. [from chiragra, Lat.] Having the gout in the hand; subject to the gout in the hand.

Chiragrical persons do suffer in the fingers as well as in the rest, and sometimes bail of all.
Browne's Vulgar Errours

CHIRO'GRAPHER. n. s. [χειρ, the hand, and γραφω, to write.] He that exercises or professes the art or business of writing.

I was put off from this office to the chirographers, to be engrossed.
Bacon.

CHIROGRAPHIST n. s. [See CHIROGRAPHER.] This word is used in the following passage, I think improperly, for one that tells fortunes by examining the hand: the true word is chirosophist, or chiromancer.

Let the physiognomists examine his features; let the chirographists behold his palm; but, above all, let us consult for the calculation of his nativity.
Arbuthnot and Pope.

CHIRO'GRAPHY. n. s. [See CHIROGRAPHER.] The art of writing.

CHI'ROMANCER. n. s. [See CHIROMANCY.] One that foretels future events by inspecting the hand.

The middle sort, who have not much to spare,
To chiromancers' cheaper art repair,
Who clap the pretty palm, to make the lines more fair.
Dryden's Juvenal

CHI'ROMANCY. n. s. [χειρ, the hand, and μαντις, a prophet.] The art of foretelling the events of life, by inspecting the hand.

There is not much considerable in that doctrine of palmistry, that spoils in the top of the mount, and only hugs gold; in the middle, the apparent; and at the bottom, excels in coppa.
Brown's Vulgar Errours

To CHIRP. v. n. [perhaps contracted from cheerup. The Dutch have circken.] To make a cheerful noise; as birds, when they call without singing.

She heard the sweet pipping flew away,
Full heavily from her head the did flay
Spenser

Come he right now to sing a raven's note;
And thinke he that the chirping of a wren
Can chaunge any true lover's found?
Shakspeare

Now chirping birds the welkin fleeces invokes
Gay's Pastorals

The cuckow then
Calls all her chirping mate around.
Hammond

To CHIRP. v. a. [This seems apparently corrupted from cheer up.] To make cheerful.

I see her begin to think of a fit
To perch on the chirping and moderate bottle
Tatler

Sir Roger grew pale, he loves cake of all things;
He tickles his chirping pot, he cracks his jokes.
Prior

CHIRP. n. s. [from the verb.] The voice of birds or insects.

Wilds over unwonted pearl'd flocks by unded bleat,
And chirp went through the grass, and wonder'd at it
Spenser

CHI'RPER. n. s. [from chirp.] One that chirps; one that is cheerful.

To CHIRRE v. n. [ceo ian, Sax.] See CHURM. To coo as a pigeon.
Junius.

CHIRU'RGEON n. s. [χειρ, from χειρ, the hand, and εργον, work.] One that cures ailments, not by internal medicines, but outward applications. It is now generally pronounced, and by many written, surgeon.

When a man's wounds cease to smart, only because he has lost his feeling, they are nevertheless mortal, for his not feeling his need of a chirurgeon.
South's Sermons

CHIRU'RGERY. n. s. [from chirurgeon.] The art of curing by external applications. This is called surgery.

Gynecea having skill in chirurgery, an art in those days much esteemed.
Sandys

Nature could do nothing in her case without the help of chirurgery, in drying up the luxurious flesh, and making way to pull out the broken bones.
Wiseman

CHIRU'RGICAL. } adj. See CHIRUR-
CHIRU'RGICK. } GEON.

1. Having qualities useful in outward applications to hurts.

As to the chirurgical or physical virtues of wax, it is reckoned a mean between hot and cold.
Mortimer.

2. Relating to the manual part of healing.

3. Manual in general, consisting in operations of the hand. This sense, though the first according to etymology, is now scarce found.

The chirurgical or manual part doth refer to the making instruments, and exercising parties for experiments.
Wotton

CHI'SEL. n. s. [ciseau, Fr. of scissum, Lat.] An instrument with which wood or stone is pared away.

What fine chisel
Could ever yet cut breath? Let no man mock me,
For I will kiss her.
Shakspeare

There is such a seeming softness in the limbs as if not a chisel had hewed them out of stone, but a pencil had drawn and stroaked them into
Waller

Imperfect shapes: in marble such are seen,
When the rude chisel does the man begin.
Dryden

To CHI'SEL. v. a. [from the noun.] To cut with a chisel.

CHIT. n. s. [according to Dr. Hickes from kind, Germ. child; perhaps from chico, little, Span.]

1. A child; a baby: generally used of young persons in contempt.

Then will appear such chits in story,
Two can all pranks to jest.
Anonymous

2. The shoot of corn from the end of the grain. A cant term with maltsters.

Barley, covered four days, will begin to shoot the chit or sprout at the root-end.
Mortimer

3. A freckle. [from chickpea.] In this sense it is seldom used.

To CHIT. v. n. [from the noun.] To sprout; to shoot at the end of the grain: cant.

I have known barley chit in seven hours after it had been thrown forth.
Mortimer

CHI'TCHAT. n. s. [corrupted by reduplication from chat.] Prattle; idle prate; idle talk. A word only used in ludicrous conversation.

I am a member of the female society, who call ourselves the chit-chat club.
Spectator

CHI'TTERLINGS. n. s. without singular. [from schyterlingh, Dut. Minshew; from kutteln, Germ. Skinner.] The guts; the bowels. Skinner.

CHI'TTY. adj. [from chit.] Childish; like a baby.

CHI'VALROUS. adj. [from chivalry.] Relating to chivalry, or errant knighthood; knightly; warlike; adventurous; daring. Out of use.

And noble minds of yore allied were
In braue pursuit of chevalrous emprise.
Fairy Queen

CHIVALRY. n. s. [chevalerie, French; knighthood, from cheval, a horse; equus in Latin. It ought properly be written chevalry. It is a word much used, but in old poems and romances.]

1. Knighthood; a military dignity.

There be now, for martial encouragement, degrees and orders of chivalry; which never heretofore, are conferred promiscuously upon soldiers and soldiers.
Bacon

2. The qualifications of a knight; valour, dexterity in arms.

Thou hast slain
The flow'r of Europe for his chivalry.
Shakspeare

I may speak it to my shame,
I have a truant been to chivalry.
Shakspeare

3. The general system of knighthood.

Solemnly he swore,
That, by the faith which knights to knighthood bore,

And whate'er else to chivalry belongs,
He would not ceaſe till he reveng'd their wrongs.
Dryd'n.

4. An adventure; an exploit. Not in uſe.
They four doing acts more dangerous, though leſs famous, becauſe they were but private chivalry. Sidney

5. The body or order of knights.
And by his light
Did all the chivalry of England move
To do brave acts. Shakſpeare.

6. In law.
Servitium militare, of the French chevalier; a tenure of land by knight's ſervice. There is no land but is holden mediately or immediately of the crown, by ſome ſervice or other; and therefore are all our freeholds, that are to us and our heirs, called feoda, fees, as proceeding from the benefit of the king. As the king gave to the nobles large poſſeſſions for this or that rent and ſervice, ſo they parcelled out their lands, ſo received for rents and ſervices, as they thought good: and thoſe ſervices are by Littleton divided into chivalry and ſocage. The one is martial and military; the other, clownish and ruſtick. Chivalry, therefore, is a tenure of ſervice, whereby the tenant is bound to perform ſome noble or military office unto his lord, and is of two ſorts; either regal, that is, ſuch as may hold only of the king; or ſuch as may alſo hold of a common perſon as well as of the king. That which may hold only of the king, is properly called ſeneantry; and is again divided into grand or petit, i. e. great or ſmall. Chivalry that may hold of a common perſon, as well as of the king, is called ſcutagium. Cowel.

CHI'VES. n. ſ. [cive, Fr. Skinner.]
1. The threads or filaments riſing in flowers with ſeeds at the end.

2. A ſpecies of ſmall onion. Skinner.

CHLOROʹSIS. n. ſ. [from χλόος, green.] The greenſickneſs.

To CHOAK. See CHOKE.

CHO'COLATE. n. ſ. [chocolate, Span.]
1. The nut of the cacao or cocoa tree.
The tree hath a roſe flower, of a great number of petals, from whoſe compaſement ariſes the pointal, being ſtrike cut into many parts, which becomes a fruit ſhaped ſomewhat like cucumber, and deeply furrowed, in which are contained ſeveral ſeeds, called cocoa-nuts, adhering heap, and flat down, ſomewhat like almonds. It is a native of America, and is found in great plenty in ſeveral places between the tropicks, and grows wild. See COCOA. Miller
2. The cake or maſs, made by grinding the kernel of the cacao nut with other ſubſtances, to be diſſolved in hot water.
The Spaniards were the firſt who brought chocolate into uſe in Europe, to promote the conſumption of their cacao-nuts, achiot, and other drugs, which their Weſt Indies furniſh, and which enter the compoſition of chocolate. Chambers
3. The liquor made by a ſolution of chocolate in hot water.
Chocolate is certainly much the beſt of theſe three exotick liquors: its oil ſeems to be both rich, alimentary, and anodyne. Arbuthnot.
In fumes of burning chocolate ſhall glow,
And tremble at the ſea that froths below! Pope

CHO'COLATE-HOUSE. n. ſ. [chocolate and houſe.] A houſe where company is entertained with chocolate.
Ever ſince that time, Lavender has been twice a day at the chocolate-houſe. Tatler.

CHODE. The old preterit of chide.
And Jacob was wroth, and chode with Laban. Geneſis.

CHOICE. n. ſ. [choix, French.]
1. The act of chooſing; determination between different things propoſed; election.
If you oblige me ſuddenly to chuſe,
The choice is made; for I muſt both refuſe. Dryd.
Soft elocution doth thy ſtyle renown,
Gentle or ſharp, according to thy choice,
To laugh at follies, or to laſh at vice. Dryden.
2. The power of chooſing; election.
Choice there is not, unleſs the thing which we take be ſo in our power, that we might have refuſed it. If fire conſume the ſtalle, it chooſes not to do, becauſe the nature thereof is ſuch that it can do no other. Hooker.
There's no liberty like the freedom of hasty: it is my own choice, whether I will live to the world, or to myſelf. L'Eſtrange.
To talk of compelling a man to be good, is a contradiction; for where there is force, there can be no choice. Whereas, all moral goodneſs conſiſteth in the elective act of the underſtanding will. Grew's Coſmologia Sacra
Whether he will remove his contemplation from one idea to another, is many times in his choice. Locke
3. Care in chooſing; curioſity of diſtinction.
Julius Cæſar did write a collection of apophthegms: it is pity his book is loſt; for I imagine they were collected with judgment and choice. Bacon's Apophthegms.
4. The thing choſen; the thing taken, or approved, in preference to others.
Your choice is not to rich in birth as beauty;
That you might well enjoy her. Shakſpeare.
Take to thee, from among the cherubim,
Thy choice of flaming warriours. Milton.
Now, Mars, ſhe ſaid, let fame exalt her race,
Nor let thy conqueſts only be our choice. Prior.

2. Juſt; fit; proper; commodious.

I can't but think 'twould ſound more clever,
To me, and to my heirs for ever. Pope.

3. Well-ſhaped; handſome.

She called him gundy-guts, and he called her louſy Peg, though the girl was a tight clever wench as any was. Arbuthnot.

4. This is a low word, ſcarcely ever uſed but in burleſque or converſation; and applied to any thing a man likes, without a ſettled meaning.

CLE'VERLY. adv. [from clever.] Dexterouſly; fitly; handſomely.

Theſe would lovingly run with th' ſcent,
And ſometimes catch them with a ſnap,
As cleverly as if a trap. Hudibras.

A rogue upon the highway may have as ſtrong an arm, and take off a man's head as cleverly, as the executioner. South.

CLE'VERNESS. n. ſ. [from clever.] Dexterity; ſkill; accompliſhment.

CLEW. n. ſ. [clyᵹe, Sax. kleuwen, Dut.]

1. Thread wound upon a bottom; a ball of thread.

Eſtiones untwiſting his deceitful clew,
He 'gan to weave a web of wicked guile. Spenſer.

While, guided by ſome clew of heav'nly thread,
The perplex'd labyrinth we backward tread.
Roſcommon.

They ſee ſmall clews draw veſſels weights along,
Not in their bulk, but in their order, ſtrong. Dryd.

2. A guide; a direction: becauſe men direct themſelves by a clew of thread in a labyrinth.

This alphabet muſt be your own clew to guide you. Holder.

Is there no way, no thought, no beam of light?
No clew to guide me through this gloomy maze,
To clear my honour yet preſerve my faith? Smith.

The reader knows not how to tranſport his thoughts over to the next particular, for want of ſome clew, or connecting idea, to lay hold of.
Watts' Logick.

3. CLEW of the ſail of a ſhip, is the lower corner of it, which reaches down to that earing where the tackles and ſheets are faſtened. Harris

To CLEW. v. a. [from clew, a ſea term.] To clew the ſails, is to raiſe them, in order to be furled; which is done by a rope faſtened to the clew of a ſail, called the clew-garnet. Harris

CLI'CKET. n. ſ. [from click.] The knocker of a door. Skinner.

CLI'ENT. n. ſ. [cliens, Latin.]

1. One who applies to an advocate for counſel and defence.

There is due from the judge to the advocate ſome commendation, where cauſes are well handled; for that upholds in the client the reputation of his counſel. Bacon's Eſſays.

Advocates muſt deal plainly with their clients, and tell the true ſtate of their caſe. Taylor.

2. It may be perhaps ſometimes uſed for a dependant in a more general ſenſe, as it was uſed among the Romans.

I do think they are your friends and clients,
And fearful to diſturb you. Ben Jonſon.

CLI'ENTED. particip. adj. [from client.] Supplied with clients.

Thus due occaſion of diſcouragement, the worſt conditioned and leaſt clienied petivoguers do yet, under the ſweet bait of revenge, convert to a more plentiful proſecution of actions. Gayton.

CLIENTE'LE. n. ſ. [clientela, Lat.] The condition or office of a client. A word ſcarcely uſed.

There's Varus holds good quarters with him;
And, under the pretext of clientele,
Will be admitted. Ben Jonſon.

CLI'ENTSHIP. n. ſ. [from client.] The condition of a client.

Patronage and clientſhip among the Romans always deſcended: the plebeian houſes had recourſe to the patrician line which had formerly protected them. Dryden.

CLIFF. n. ſ. [clivus, Lat. clip, cliop, Sax.]

1. A ſteep rock; a rock, according to Skinner, broken and craggy. [rupes.]

The Leucadians did uſe to precipitate a man from a high cliff into the ſea. Bacon.

Mountaineers, that from Severus came,
And from the craggy cliffs of Tetrica. Dryden.

Wherever 'tis ſo found ſcattered upon the ſhores, there is it as conſtantly found lodged in the cliffs thereabouts. Woodward.

2. A character in muſick. Properly CLEF.

CLIFT. n. ſ. The ſame with CLIFF. Now diſuſed.

Down he tumbled, like an aged tree,
High growing on the top of rocky clift. Spenſer.

CLIMA'CTER. n. ſ. [κλιμακτὴρ.] A certain ſpace of time, or progreſſion of years, which is ſuppoſed to end in a critical and dangerous time.

Elder times, ſetting their conceits upon climacters, differ from one another. Brown.

CLIMACTE'RICK. } adj. [from climacter.]
CLIMACTE'RICAL. } Containing a certain number of years, at the end of which ſome great change is ſuppoſed to befal the body.

Certain obſervable years are ſuppoſed to be attended with ſome conſiderable change in the body; as the ſeventh year; the twenty-firſt, made up of three times ſeven, the forty-ninth, made up of ſeven times ſeven; the ſixty-third, being nine times ſeven; and the eighty-firſt, which is nine times nine: which two laſt are called the grand *climacterick*s.

The numbers ſeven and nine, multiplied into themſelves, do make up ſixty-three, commonly eſteemed the great climacterical of our lives.
Brown's Vulgar Errours.

Your lordſhip being now arrived at your great climacterique, yet give no proof of the leaſt decay of your excellent judgment and comprehenſion.
Dryden.

My mother is ſomething better, though, at her advanced age, every day is a climacterick. Pope.

CLI'MATE. n. ſ. [κλίμα.]

1. A ſpace upon the ſurface of the earth, meaſured from the equator to the polar circles; in each of which ſpaces the longeſt day is half an hour longer than in that nearer to the equator. From the polar circles to the poles, climates are meaſured by the increaſe of a month.

2. In the common and popular ſenſe, a region, or tract of land, differing from another by the temperature of the air.

Betwixt th' extremes, two happier climates hold
The temper that partakes of hot and cold. Dryd.

On what new happy climate are we thrown? Loyd.

This talent of moving the paſſions cannot be of any great uſe in the northern climates. Swift.

To CLI'MATE. v. n. To inhabit. A word only in Shakſpeare.

The bleſſed gods
Purge all infection from our air, whilſt you
Do climate here. Shakſpeare.

CLI'MATURE. n. ſ. The ſame with CLIMATE. Not in uſe.

Such harbingers preceding ſtill the fates,
Have heav'n and earth together demonſtrated
Unto our climatures and countrymen. Shakſp.

CLI'MAX. n. ſ. [κλῖμαξ.] Gradation; aſcent: a figure in rhetorick, by which the ſentence riſes gradually; as Cicero ſays to Catiline, Thou doeſt nothing, mooveſt nothing, thinkeſt nothing; but I hear it, I ſee it, and perfectly underſtand it.

Choice between one excellency and another is difficult; and yet the concluſion, by a due climax, is evermore the beſt. Dryden's Juv. Dedication.

Some radiant Richmond every age has grac'd,
Still riſing in a climax, till the laſt,
So paſſing all, is not to be ſurpaſt. Granville.

To CLIMB. v. n. pret. clomb or climbed; part. clomb or climbed. It is pronounced like clime [climan, Sax. klimmen, Dutch.] To aſcend up any place; to mount by means of ſome hold or footing. It implies labour and difficulty, and ſucceſſive efforts.

You tempt the fury of my three attendants,
Lean famine, quartering ſteel, and climbing fire.
Shakſpeare.

When ſhall I come to th' top of that faire hill?—

—You do climb up it now. Look, how we labour. Shakſpeare.

Jonathan climbed up upon his hands and upon his feet. 2 Samuel.

As a thief
Into the window climbs, or o'er the tiles,
So clomb the firſt grand thief into God's fold.
Milton.

Thou ſon! of this great world both eye and ſoul,
Acknowledge him thy greater; ſound his praiſe
In thy eternal courſe, both when thou climb'ſt,
And when high noon haſt gain'd, and when thou fall'ſt. Milton's Paradiſe Loſt.

No rebel Titan's ſacrilegious crime,
By heaping hills on hills, can thither climb.
Roſcommon.

Black vapours climb aloft, and cloud the day.
Dryden.

What controuling cauſe
Makes waters, in contempt of nature's laws,
Climb up, and gain th' aſpiring mountains height?
Blackmore.

To CLIMB. v. a. To aſcend; to mount.

It 's not enough to break into my garden,
Climbing my walls in ſpite of me the owner?
Shakſpeare.

Thy arms purſue
Paths of renown, and climb aſcents of fame.
Prior.

Forlorn he muſt and perſecuted fly,
Climb the ſteep mountain, in the caverns lie. Prior.

CLI'MBER. n. ſ. [from climb.]

1. One that mounts or ſcales any place or thing; a mounter; a riſer.

I wait not at the lawyer's gates,
Ne ſhoulders climbers down the ſtairs. Carew.

Lowlineſs is young ambition's ladder,
Whereto the climber upward turns his face.
Shakſpeare.

2. A plant that creeps upon other ſupports.

Ivy, bryony, honey-ſuckles, and other climbers muſt be dug up. Mortimer.

To CLI'MBER. v. n [from climber.] To mount with effort; to climb.

In ſcaling the youngeſt to pluck off his becke,
Beware how ye climber for breaking your neck.
Tuſſer.

CLIME. n. ſ. [contracted from climate, and therefore properly poetical.] Climate; region; tract of earth.

He can ſpread thy name o'er land and ſeas,
Whatever clime the ſun's bright circle warms.
Milton.

They apply the celeſtial deſcription of other climes unto their own. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

Of beauty ſing, her ſhining progreſs view,
From clime to clime the dazzling light purſue
Granville.

We ſhall meet
In happier climes, and on a better ſhore. Addiſon.

Health to vigorous bodies, or fruitful ſeaſons in temperate climes, are common and familiar bleſſings. Atterbury.

To CLINCH. v. a. [clýncza, Saxon, to knock, Junius; clingo, in Feſtus, to encompaſs, Minſheu.]

1. To hold in the hand with the fingers bent over it.

Simois rowls the bodies and the ſhields
Of heroes, whoſe diſmember'd hands yet bear
The dart aſeft, and clinch the pointed ſpear. Dryden.

Their tallett trees are about ſeven feet high, the tops whereof I could but juſt reach with my hit Sandys.

3. To bend the point of a nail on the other ſide.

4. To confirm; to fix: as, to clinch an argument.

CLINCH. n. ſ. [from the verb.]

1. A word uſed in a double meaning; a pun; an ambiguity; a duplicity of meaning, with an identity of expreſſion. How it obtains this meaning is difficult to find. A nail caught on the other ſide, and doubled, is a nail clinched: a word taken in a different meaning, and doubled in ſenſe, is likewiſe a clinch.

Such as they are, I hope they will prove, without a clinch, luciferous; ſearching after the nature of light. Boyle.

Pure clinches the ſuburbian muſe affords,
And Panton waging harmleſs war with words
Dryden.

Here one poor word a hundred clinches makes
Pope.

2. That part of the cable which is faſtened to the ring of the anchor.

CLINCHER. n. ſ. [from clinch.] A cramp; a holdfaſt; a piece of iron bent down to faſten planks.

The wimble for the work Calypſo found;
With thoſe he pierc'd 'em, and with clinchers bound. Pope.

To CLING. v. n. pret. I clung; part. I have clung. [klynger, Danith.]

1. To hang upon by twining round; to ſtick to; to hold faſt upon.

The broad lug doubtful flood;
As two ſpent ſwimmers that do cling together,
And clinch their art. Shakſpeare.

The fingernail of his neck was deformed by the clinging of his hair to the plaſter. Wiſeman.

When they unite and together cling,
When undiſtinguiſh'd in one heap they lurk. Blackmore.

See in the circle next Eliza plac'd,
Two babes of love clote clinging to her waiſt. Pope.

That they may tye cloſer cling,
Take your blue ribbon for a ſtring. Swift.

2. To adhere, as followers or friends.

Moſt pity that ſo conſtant he is grown,
When his moſt clinging friends are moſt undone! Ben Jonſon.

3. To dry up; to conſume; to waſte; to pine away. [ceclungen, Saxon, a withered tree.]

If thou ſpeak'ſt falſe,
Upon the next tree ſhalt thou hang alive,
Till famine cling thee. Shakſpeare's M. Lath

CLI'NGY. adj. [from cling.] Apt to cling; adheſive.

CLI'NICAL. } adj. [κλίνη, to lie down.]

A clinical convert, one that is converted on his deathbed. This word occurs often in the works of Taylor.

To CLINK. v. a. [perhaps ſoftened from clank, or corrupted from click.] To ſtrike ſo as to make a ſmall ſharp noiſe.

Five years! a long leaſe for the clinking of pewter. Shakſpeare.

To CLINK. v. n. To utter a ſmall, ſharp, interrupted noiſe.

The ſever'd bars
Submiſſive clink againſt your brazen portals. Prior.

Underneath th' umbrella's only ſhed,
Safe thro' the wet on clinking pattens tread. Gay.

CLINK. n. ſ. [from the verb.]

1. A ſharp ſucceſſive noiſe; a knocking.

I heard the clink and fall of ſwords Shakſp.

2. It ſeems in Spenſer to have ſome unuſual ſenſe. I believe the knocker of a door.

Tho' creeping cloſe, behind the wicket's clink,
Prudy he peeped out thro' a chink. Spenſer.

CLINQUANT. adj. [French.] Dreſſed in embroidery, in ſpangles, falſe glitter, tinſel finery.

To-day the French,
All clinquant, all in gold, like heathen gods,
Shone down the Engliſh. Shakſpeare.

To CLIP. v. a. [clippan, Saxon.]

1. To embrace, by throwing the arms round; to hug; to enfold in the arms.

Here I clip
The anvil of my ſword, and do contend
Hotly and nobly with thy love. Shakſpeare.

O nature, that thou could'ſt remove
That Neptune's arms, who clipp'd the about. Shakſpeare.

Enter the city; clip your wives, your friends,
Tell them your feats. Shakſpeare.

The jades
That drag the tragick melancholy night,
Who with their drowſy, ſlow, and flagging wings,
Clip dead men's graves. Shakſpeare.

The male reſteth on the back of the female, clipping and embracing her with his legs about the neck and body. Ray.

2. To cut with ſheers. [klipper, Danith; klippen, Dutch; apparently from the ſame radical ſenſe, ſince ſheers cut by enclaſing and embracing.]

Your ſheers come too late to clip the bird's wings, that already is flown away. Sidney.

Then I'll ſtrike, that my love ſhall be me,
Or clip love's wings, or quench love's flame. Suckling.

He clipp'd Jupiter's wings, whoſe very life
Much higher than fruition is. Denham.

But I've had clipp'd his wings, and cut him ſhort,
Confin'd within the purlieus of his court. Dryd.

If mankind had had wings, as perhaps ſome extravagant atheiſts may think us deficient in that, all the world muſt have conſented to clip them. Bentley.

By this lock, this ſacred lock, I ſwear,
Which never more ſhall join its parted hair,
Clipp'd from the lovely head where late it grew. Pope.

He ſpent every day ten hours dozing, clipping papers, or darning his ſtockings. Swift.

3. Sometimes with off

We ſhould then have as much feeling upon the clipping off a hair, as the cutting of a nerve. Bentley's Sermons.

4. It is particularly uſed of thoſe who diminiſh coin, by paring the edges.

The clipping of new coinage, is juſt of the nature of coining. Locke.

5. To curtail; to cut ſhort.

All my reports go with the modeſt truth;
Nor more, nor clipt, but ſo. Shakſpeare.

Mrs. Mayoreſs clipped the king's Engliſh. Addiſon.

Even in London they clip their words after one manner about the court, another in the city, and a third in the ſuburbs. Swift.

Co'CKNEY. n. f. [A word of which the original is much controverted. The French use an expression, pais de cocagne, for a country of dainties.

Paris est pour un riche un pais de cocagne.
Boileau.

Of this word they are not able to settle the original. It appears, whatever was its first ground, to be very ancient, being mentioned in an old Normanno-Saxon poem:

Tir in fee by west Spaying,
Is a loud y-bore cocaigning.

On which Dr Hickes has this remark:

Nunc cocaigne, cocaigne quæ olim apud Gallos, otio, gulæ, et ventri deditos, ignavum, ignavam, desidiosum, desidiosam, segnem, ignificabant. Hinc urbanos, utpote a rusticis laboribus ad vitam sedentariam et desidiosam avocatos, pagani nostri olim cokaignes, quod nunc scribitur cockneys, vocabant. Et postea hic noster in monachos & moniales, ut segne genus hominum qui, desidiæ dediti, ventri indulgebant, & coquinæ amatores erant, malevolus satis invehitur; monasteria & monasticam vitam inde scripturæ terræ cockaine parabolice perstringens.]

1. A native of London, by way of contempt.

Sir, [we] did to the cost, when [we] put them in to party alive. Shakspeare's K. Lear.

For who is such a cockney, in this land,
Proud of the plenty of the times past,
To curse the [times], by whom we [now]
Have [had] the commencement [and] end [of] joy?
Jonson.

The cockney, travelling into the country, is surprized at many common practices of rural affairs. Watts.

While dryness's moisture, coldness's heat resists,
All that we have, and that we are subsists. Denh.

2. Unconcern; frigidity of temper; want of zeal; negligence; disregard.

Divisions of religion are not only the fastest spread, because in religion all men pretume themselves interested; but they are also, for the most part, hotter prosecuted; forasmuch as coldness, which, in other contentions, may be thought to proceed from moderation, is not in these to favourably construed. Hooker.

If, upon reading admired passages in authors, he finds a coldness and indifference in his thoughts, he ought to conclude, that he himself wants the faculty of discovering them. Addison.

It betrayed itself in a sort of indifference and carelessness in all her actions, and a coldness to her best friends. Arbuthnot.

3. Coyness; want of kindness; want of passion.

Unhappy youth! how will thy coldness raise
Tempests and storms in his afflicted bosom!
Addison's Cato.

Let every tongue its various censures chuse,
Absolve with coldness, or with spite accuse. Pope

4. Chastity; exemption from vehement desire.

The silver stream her virgin coldness keeps,
For ever murmurs, and for ever weeps. Pope

COLE. n. s. [caul, Saxon.] A general name for all sorts of cabbage.

COLESEED. n. s. [from cole and seed.] Cabbage seed.

COLEWORT. n. s. [caulipyrt, Sax.] A species of cabbage.

The decoction of coleworts is also commended to bathe them. Wiseman of an Erysipelas

She took the coleworts, which her husband got
From his own ground (a small well-water'd spot),
She strip'd the stalks of all their leaves; the best
She cull'd, and then with handy care she dress'd. Dryden.

How turnips hide their swelling heads below,
And how the closing coleworts upwards grow. Gay

COLICK. n. s. [colicus, Latin.]

It strictly is a disorder of the colon; but loosely, any disorder of the stomach or bowels that is attended with pain. These are four sorts: 1. A bilious colick, which proceeds from an abundance of acrimony or choler irritating the bowels, so as to occasion continual gripes, and generally with a looseness; and this is best managed with lenitives and emollients. 2. A flatulent colick, which is pain in the bowels from flatuses and wind, which distend them into unequal and unnatural capacities; and this is managed with carminatives and moderate openers. 3. An hysterical colick, which arises from disorders of the womb, and is communicated by consent of parts to the bowels; and is to be treated with the ordinary hystericks. 4. A nervous colick, which is from convulsive spasms and contortions of the guts themselves, from some disorders of the spirits, or nervous fluid, in their component fibres; whereby their capacities are in many places straightened, and sometimes so as to occasion obstinate obstructions; this is best remedied by brisk cathartick, joined with opiates and emolient dilutors. There is also a species of this distemper, which is commonly called the stone colick, by consent of parts, from the irritation of the stone or gravel in the bladder or kidneys; and this is most commonly to be treated by nephriticks and oily diureticks, and is greatly assisted with the carminative turpentine clysters. Quincy.

Cholicks of infants proceed from acidity, and the air in the aliment expanding itself, while the aliment ferments. Arbuthnot.

COLICK. adj. Affecting the bowels.

Intestine stone and ulcer, colick pangs Milt.

Stilling fleet.

There it is not ſtrange, that the mind ſhould give itſelf up to the common opinion, or render itſelf to the firſt comer. Locke.

Houſe and heart are open for a friend: the paſſage is eaſy, and not only admits, but even invites, the comer. South.

COMET. n. ſ. [cometa, Lat. a hairy ſtar.]

A heavenly body in the planetary region, appearing ſuddenly, and again diſappearing; and, during the time of its appearance, moving through its proper orbit like a planet. The orbits of comets are ellipſes, having one of their foci in the centre of the ſun; and being very long and eccentrick, they become inviſible when in that part moſt remote from the ſun. Comets, popularly called blazing ſtars, are diſtinguiſhed from other ſtars by a long train or tail of light, always oppoſite to the ſun: hence ariſes a popular diviſion of comets into three kinds, bearded, tailed, and haired comets; though the diviſion rather relates to the different circumſtances of the ſame comet, than to the phænomena of the ſeveral. Thus, when the comet is eaſtward of the ſun, and moves from it, the comet is ſaid to be bearded, barbatus, becauſe the light marches before it. When the light is weſtward of the ſun, the comet is ſaid to be tailed, becauſe the train follows it. When the comet and the ſun are diametrically oppoſite, the earth being between them, the train is hid behind the body of the comet, excepting a little that appears around it, in form of a border of hair, hence called crinitus.

According to sir Isaac Newton, the tail of a comet is a very thin vapour, emitted by the head or nucleus of the comet, ignited by the neighbourhood to the sun; and this vapour is furnished by the atmosphere of the comet. The vapours of comets being thus dilated, rarefied, and diffused may probably, by means of their own gravity, be attracted down to the planets, and become intermingled with their atmospheres. For the conservation of the water and moisture of the planets, comets seem absolutely requisite; from whose condensed vapours and exhalations all that moisture which is spent in vegetations and putrefactions, and turned into dry earth, may be resupplied and recruited; for all vegetables increase wholly from fluids, and turn, by putrefaction, into earth. Hence the quantity of dry earth must continually increase, and the moisture of the globe decrease, and at last be quite evaporated, if it have not a continual supply. And I suspect, adds sir Isaac, that the spirit which makes the finest, subtilest, and best part of our air, and which is absolutely requisite for the life and being of all things, comes principally from the comets.

The same great author has computed that the sun's heat, in the comet of 1680, was, to his heat with us at midsummer, as twenty-eight thousand to one; and that the heat of the body of the comet was near two thousand times as great as that of red-hot iron. He also calculates, that a globe of red-hot iron, of the dimensions of our earth, would scarce be cool in fifty thousand years. If then the comet be supposed to cool a hundred times as fast as red-hot iron, yet, since its heat was two thousand times greater, supposing it of the bigness of the earth, it would not be cool in a million of years.

Treasury of Knowledge.

And wherefore gaze this goodly company,
As if they saw some wond'rous monument,
Some comet, or unusual prodigy? Shakspeare.

Such his full glances as the fatal light
Of flaring comets. Crashaw.

5. Bold to a vice; elated with false opinion of his own excellencies; impudent.

Co'nfident. n. s. [from confide.] One trusted with secrets.

If ever it comes to this, that a man can say of his confident, he would have deceived me, it has said enough. Sidney.

You have me for no other end,
But to become my confident and friend;
As such, I keep no secret from your sight. Dryden.

Co'nfidently. adv. [from confident.]

1. Without doubt; without fear of miscarriage.

We shall not be ever the less likely to meet with success, if we do not expect it too confidently. Atterbury.

2. With firm trust.

The maid becomes a youth; no more delay:
Your vows, fair lark, and orisons pay. Dryden.

3. Without appearance of doubt; without suspecting any failure or deficience; positively; dogmatically.

Many men talk of all know what they themselves must confidently boast. Ben Jonson.

It is strange how the ancients took up opinions upon credit, and yet did build great matters upon them: the observation of some of the best of them, delivered confidently, as a vessel filled with others will receive the like quantity of water as if it had been empty; this is utterly untrue. Bacon.

Every fool may believe, and pronounce confidently, but wise men will conclude hardly. South.

Co'nfidentness. n. s. [from confident.] Favourable opinion of one's own powers; assurance. Dict.

Configura'tion. n. s. [configuration, French.]

CO'NSTABLE. n. s. [comes stabuli, as it is supposed.]

1. Lord high constable is an ancient officer of the crown. The function of the constable of England consisted in the care of the common peace of the land in deeds of arms, and in matters of war. To the court of the constable and marshal belonged the cognizance of contracts, deeds of arms without the realm, and combats and blazonry of arms within it. The first constable of England was created by the Conqueror, and the office continued hereditary till the thirteenth of Henry VIII. when it was laid aside, as being to powerful as to become troublesome to the king. From these mighty magistrates are derived the inferiour constables of hundreds and franchises; two of whom were ordained, in the thirteenth of Edward I. to be chosen in every hundred, for the conservation of the peace, and view of armour. These are now called high constables; because continuance of time, and increase both of people and offences, have occasioned others in every town of inferiour authority, called petty constables. Besides these, we have constables denominated from particular places; as, constable of the Tower, of Dover Castle, of the Castle of Carnarvon: but these are properly castellani, or governours of castles. Cowell. Chambers.

When I came hither, I was lord high constable,
And duke of Buckingham; now poor Edward Bohun. Shakspeare

The knave constable, had set me i' th' stocks, i' th' common stocks, for a witch. Shakspeare.

The constable being a sober man, and an enemy to sedition, went to observe what they did.
Clarendon.

2. To overrun the CONSTABLE. [perhaps from conte stable, Fr. the settled, firm, and stated account.] To spend more than what a man knows himself to be worth: a low phrase.

CO'NSTABLESHIP. n. s. [from constable.] The office of a constable.

This keepership is annexed to the constableship of the castle, and that granted out in lease.
Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

CO'NSTANCY. n. s. [constantia, Latin.]

1. Immutability; perpetuity; unalterable continuance.

The laws of God himself no man will ever deny to be of a different constitution from the former, in respect of the one's constancy, and the mutability of the other. Hooker.

2. Consistency; unvaried state.

Incredible, that constancy in such a variety, such a multiplicity, should be the result of chance. Ray on the Creation.

3. Resolution; firmness; steadiness; unshaken determination.

In a small isle, amidst the widest seas,
Triumphant constancy has fix'd her seat;
In vain the syrens sing, the tempests beat. Prior.

4. Lasting affection; continuance of love, or friendship.

Constancy is such a stability and firmness of friendship, as overlooks and passes by little failures of kindness, and yet still retains the same habitual good-will to a friend. South.

5. Certainty; veracity; reality.

But all the story of the night told over,
More witness'th than fancy's images,
And grows to something of great constancy;
But, however, strange and admirable. Shaksp.

CO'NSTANT. adj. [constans, Latin.]

1. Firm; fixed; not fluid.

If you take highly rectified spirit of wine, and dephlegmed spirit of urine, and mix them, you may turn these two fluid liquors into a constant body. Boyle's Hist. of Firmness.

2. Unvaried; unchanged; immutable; durable.

The world's a scene of changes, and to be Constant, in nature were inconstancy. Cowley.

3. Firm; resolute; determined; immovable; unshaken.

Some shrewd contents
Now steal the colour from Bassanio's cheek
Some dear friend dead; else nothing in the world
Could turn so much the constitution
Of any constant man. Shakspeare's Mer. of Ven.

4. Free from change of affection.

Both loving one fair maid, they yet remained constant friends Sidney.

5. Certain; not various; steady; firmly adherent: with to.

Now the upon the land his care of souls he first fix'd,
And like a primitive apostle preach'd;
Still cheerful, ever constant to his call;
By many follow'd, lov'd by most, admir'd by all. Dryden.

He shewed his firm adherence to religion, as made fast by our national constitution; and was constant to its offices in devotion both in public, and in his family Addison's Freeholder.

CO'NSTANTLY. adv. [from constant.] Unvariably; perpetually; certainly; steadily.

It is strange that the fathers should never appeal; nay, that they should not constantly do it.
Dryden.

To CONSTE'LLATE. v. n. [constellatus, Latin.] To join lustre; to shine with one general light.

The several things which engage our affections, do, in a transcendant manner, shine forth and constellate in God. Boyle.

To CONSTE'LLATE. v. a. To unite several shining bodies in one splendour.

Great constitutions, and such as are constellated into knowledge, do nothing till they outdo all. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

These ſcattered perfections which were divided among the ſeveral ranks of inferiour natures, were ſummed up and conſtellated in ours. Glanville.

CONSTELLA'TION. n. ſ. [from conſtellate.]

1. A cluſter of fixed ſtars.

For the ſtars of heaven, and the conſtellations thereof, ſhall not give their light. Iſaiah.

The earth, the air, reſounded;
The heav'ns and all the conſtellations rung.
Milton's Par. Loſt.

A conſtellation is but one;
Though 'tis a train of ſtars. Dryden.

2. An aſſemblage of ſplendours, or excellencies.

The condition is a conſtellation or conjuncture of all thoſe goſpel graces, faith, hope, charity, ſelf-denial, repentance, and the reſt. Hammond.

CONSTERNA'TION. n. ſ. [from conſterno, Lat.] Aſtoniſhment; amazement; alienation of mind by a ſurpriſe; ſurpriſe; wonder.

They find the ſame holy conſternation upon themſelves that Jacob did at Bethel, which he called the gate of heaven. South.
